Seek licensed termite men, inspector says

Frankfort, April 23—property owners wishing to control termites should employ a State-licensed exterminator instead of a "fly-by-night," warns Inspector Earle B. Hutchins of the Division of Weights and Measures.

Hutchins says this problem is serious because many operators do not know enough about termites to control them. "Then comes the unscrupulous operator," Hutchins warns "who, like a parasite, swoops down on the unsuspecting property owner and extracts a sizable sum, having done practically nothing."

The first-sticky termite and pest control law was enacted to protect the public from unethical operators. Many of their victims have been older persons or widows who have been easy prey for "fast-talking salesmen," Hutchins says.

The law requires that each operator in Kentucky be licensed by the State Agriculture Department. Before an operator is granted a license he is required to take an examination and show proof of financial responsibility. The licensed operator is required to send reports on all termite contracts to the agency.

Field representatives of Hutchins' division make routine calls on exterminators and inspect a percentage of contracts. If an operator is not fulfilling a contract, a complaint may be registered with the department. After investigation, the operator is given a certain period in which to correct the complaint or have his license revoked.

NEW-TYPE Concrete

New-type, sound-conditioned concrete for your newest highways

Developed to meet the highway standards of 1975. Everything a good driver wants—new-type concrete has. There's never a "thump." It's sound-conditioned. Laid continuously, this pavement has no joints . . . only tiny, almost invisible cushion spaces, sawed into the concrete. You skim over them and don't know it! This new-type concrete is laid flat—stays flat. It has a life expectancy of 50 years and more.

Over 90% of America's most heavily travelled roads have been built of concrete. It's the preferred pavement for new primary roads.

The true cost of Kentucky's new highways

It all depends on how long they last. New-type concrete has a life expectancy of 50 years and more. First cost is moderate. Maintenance costs are lower than for any other type of pavement. That's why tax dollars go further with concrete.

Our next meeting will be with Mrs. Shelly Gaunce, May 6.

Farm facts

William C. Johnstone

APRIL—1958

Specialized Farming. One of the greatest changes taking place in agriculture during recent years has been the shift from general to specialized farming. A few years ago, for instance, the average farmer produced several things for the market, including, most of the time, poultry, dairy products and hogs. Often his production was haphazard—poultry survived mostly on what they picked up around the barn; cows got little besides poor hay, pasture and nubbins; and with hogs; it was really "root hog or die".

Today if a person wishes to succeed on the farm he must specialize. He must either be good at his specialty or he will go broke.

Poultry production is so specialized that the farmer first must decide in what phase he will specialize—eggs, for the market, eggs for the hatchery or broilers. He never undertakes but one. If he produces broilers the minimum capacity should be near 25,000 a year and several of our Kentucky farmers are now producing over 100,000 annually. Laying flocks usually have at least 1000 hens and some run many times that number.

Hog production is also becoming specialized. The trend is for one farmer to specialize in the production of feeder pigs to be marketed at 50 or 60 pounds and another farmer to "feed out" the finished hogs. They must each, of course, endeavor to produce a meat type hog because lard is a drag on the market.

In dairy production the trend is towards large herds of high producing cows with costly milking parlors and modern milking and cooling equipment. The same trend is seen in the production of fruits and vegetables. The grower must be a specialist or he fails.

This trend towards specialized farming could benefit the small Kentucky farmer. He can select the enterprise best suited to his land, his market and to his personal likes and dislikes, and produce as efficiently as farmers in any other areas. It used to be that livestock enterprises were confined closely to the areas where the feed was produced. Now, the feed is shipped to the areas where the farmers are most specialized. Thus, a broiler or egg producer in the mountains can produce just as cheaply as those living in the corn belt if he has the ability and capital to do the job efficiently.

With the coming of the low-cost plastic greenhouses developed by the University of Kentucky new opportunities are opened for the small farmer who applies himself to the production of high quality winter vegetables.

So it seems that specialized farming in the production of eggs, broilers, feeder pigs or greenhouse vegetables offer a real opportunity for additional income on many Kentucky farms. But, again, there are two very important limitations—the ability and perseverance of the farmer and adequate capital to initiate the enterprise.

Exams set for police jobs

Frankfort Ky. — A series of competitive exams for Kentucky State trooper openings was announced by Director of State Police Paul M. Smith.

The examinations will be conducted at State Police Headquarters in Frankfort April 26 and 29 and May 1.

Smith stressed the advantages of the positions pointing out that cadet troopers starting salary is $333 per month. "After successful completion of a 12 week training school at Frankfort, cadets are promoted to trooper at a salary of $324 per month," the State Police head stated.

He said State Trooper positions offer excellent retirement benefits and merit system employment. Smith urged persons interested in the openings to contact the nearest State Police Post or write Kentucky State Police, Frankfort.

Director Smith said applicants must have the following basic qualifications:

1. Resident of Kentucky and a U. S. citizen.
2. High school graduate.
3. In excellent physical condition.
4. Of good moral character.
5. Possess a valid Kentucky operator's license.
6. Be not less than 21 nor more than 30 years of age.
7. 5' 9½" tall without shoes.
8. Weigh not less than 150 pounds. Weight must be in proportion to height.

Farm phone service costs in the U. S. are up, farmers paying an average of $3.03 a month, compared to $3.66 last year.
