MIDGE VS. AN MG

By Shirley Sargent

"I'D WARNER stood hand in hand with Midge staring through the plate glass window at the one sports car Elton owned. A fast, dark blue MG that he dreamed was his own.

"Midge," he said quietly, "If you loved me as much as you did that Ferrari, you'd find a job."

Her challenge recalled him to his troubles. "MG," she corrected. "Fiats are my favorites, but it's love I love, Mike. Who ever heard of a car with blueberry pie or wheat-colored seat? Only your lions would defeat any debater."

"Oh, Tad!" Midge cried, but he held up one liked it. "If only you'd take that job in the department store."

"I'd hate it even though I would be making money." But, when Tad held Midge in his arms, he knew there could be no more delay. A trick knee kept him out of the army, but only his pride kept him from the department store job Mason would mean marriage and that's what they both wanted.

Tad walked into the barn he'd converted into a home half an hour later, barely noticing his old jeans, ragged shirt, or the scene of restlessly, thinking of his two passions—Midge and sports cars. He had magazines devoted to pictures of every known make piled high on the floor and framed pictures on the walls. Then, Fiat and an MG

Promptly at nine the following morning, Tad entered the store—the hobby shop not the department store—in search of a job. His heart sank as he glanced at the dark interior jammed with boxes and models in wildest disorder.

"Good morning," he spoke to the thin, white-haired man who appeared at the sound of a bell. "I know quite a bit about model cars and . . . well . . . I'm looking for a job."

The old man laughed soundlessly. "Here!"

"Thanks!" Tad sounded far more assured than he felt.

"I'm old now, and again, but his eyes measured Tad. "Give me five minutes why you'd be able to the shop."

Tad looked around, thoughts racing. "I'd clean this place out so people could walk through without hitting things, set a model train up on a table and keep it running when customers were in the store. Put some windows so attractive boys would come on in and I'd have a certain time each week to help kids with their models and trains and cars."

"That's only four."

"Well, if I were running it, I'd put in a magazine rack and subscribe to the better hobby magazines like the sports car ones. Then I'd let anybody look at them, but I'd be willing to take subscriptions.

"That's six," the old man stuck out an arthritis hand. "My name's John Thorleaf. You think your ideas would bring more money into the shop?"

"Yes!" Tad held his breath.

"All right, prove it in a month and I'll put you on a salary of $200 plus commissions on electric trains and tools. But you've got to handle the work, too."

"I'll try and keep you busy, Mr. Thorleaf," Tad promised. "Okay if I go right to work?"

By the time Tad met Midge that night he was bone-tired but confident. "It's the future I like," he explained. "If I bring customers into the shop—and I will—I'm willing to bet Thorleaf will let me go in later."

"There won't be any MG on that kind of money," Midge warned.

"When I'm running the shop I'll be paying for little Midges and Tads, not a sports car," Tad laughed, finding confirmation in Midge's blueberry eyes.

Army's 'STRAC' exhibit premiere Sept. 4-13 at Kentucky State Fair

CAMERON STATION, Alexandria, Va.—The U. S. Army's recently announced Strategic Army Corps—more popularly known as "STRAC"—will be unveiled to East Coast residents for the first time in an official exhibit coming to the Kentucky State Fair, September 4-13, it was announced today.

Coming to Louisville by motorcade from Des Moines, Iowa where the premiere showing was held, the huge exhibit shows the Army's ability to cope with small, limited conflicts as well as all-out atomic war and forecasts weapons of the future projected to the year 1975.

Spanning the historical and technological evolution of weaponry from man's earliest attempts to defend himself in the Stone Age to the present-time, the exhibit points up Army success in meeting the challenge of the electronic-atomic-missile era. The operational weapons of today shown in one era of the exhibit, from the basis for the futuristic weapons predictions of two decades hence shown along an opposite wall.

The exhibit, prepared by the Army's Chief of Information, was designed to authentically inform the American public on the Army's ability to cope with present and future military problems. It explains the concept behind the STRAC forces and emphasizes the modern Army's requirements for far-ranging mobility, long-ranging firepower and wide-ranging communications necessary to achieve victory on the atomic battlefield.

A unique three-dimensional sequence theater with voice narration describes the versatility of the Army's STRAC command and a color motion picture shows modern Army soldiers putting their new weapons and equipment to use in actual field maneuvers.

Home agent gives tip

Have you ever thought what you would do if the power lines in your area were down because of a storm, causing your freezer to stop running? Stocked as it is with frozen vegetables, fruits, meats and other foods, the loss may be considerable if you do not know what to do, says Mrs. Margie H. Wilson, home demonstration agent in Nicholas County.

Fortunately, the U. S. Department of Agriculture has done careful testing to see just what would happen to the food. If the freezer will be off just a few hours, you need not worry, for your food is safe. The first thing then is try to find out how long the power will be off. In the meantime, don't open the freezer any more than is necessary, letting the warm air in.

In a freezer that is full, food won't thaw if the power is off for two days. If it is only half full food should keep well for a day. The larger the freezer and the better it is insulated, the better the food will keep.

Mrs. Wilson recommends that now, before an emergency arises, is the time to locate the nearest place where you could get dry ice if the power will be off more than one or two days.

A recommended way to handle dry ice is to saw a 50-pound chunk into smaller pieces, placing them on pieces of cardboard on top of frozen food packages. Always wear gloves when working with dry ice, and do not let it touch the skin.

Although it isn't necessary in most freezers, a pencil placed underneath the lid of the freezer will permit the gas from the dry ice to escape. Blankets may be put around the freezer packed with dry ice, as long as the air vent is not covered.

In an emergency, it may be necessary to transfer the frozen food from the home freezer to a commercial locker plant.

Merry Christmas! Its later than you think The Post Office Department has distributed to the post offices across the nation a multicolored poster urging that Christmas parcels for armed forces overseas be mailed between November 7 and November 20 . . .

Our congratulations to the Little Leagues. Not only to the winning team but every local church team. Each one contributed his share in making Little League baseball a success in Carlisle this summer. We thank all who gave so much to this project. Lets not forget the mothers who fixed meals at odd hours so that the boys would be on time for practice and games, gave their encouragement, ran taxi service, and kept the boys happy and healthy.
