CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

The imperative need for spiritual alertness as our defense from evil will be stressed in Christian Science services Sunday.

Bible readings in the Lesson-Sermon entitled "Ancient and Modern Necromancy, alias Mesmerism and Hypnotism Denounced" will include the following from James (4:3 3, 12):

"My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience . . . Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."

A correlative passage from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy declares: "Christians must take up arms against error at home and abroad. They must grapple with sin in themselves and in others, and continue this warfare until they have finished their course. If they keep the faith, they will have the crown of rejoicing" (29:1).

Breakfast is important for teenagers

The boy or girl who is headed for high school this fall may need a heartier breakfast than he has been eating.

The suggestion comes from Mrs. Lucille Warren, U.K. extension foods specialist, who points out that as boys and girls reach adolescence, their nutritional needs are higher than ever before. Boys need more, food than at any other age, and girls need more than most other times in their lives.

Mrs. Warren made this in a study made by Dr. Ruth Leverton, associate director of the Institute of Home Economics, USDA, who stated that there is no substitute for a good breakfast, and that it is difficult, if not impossible, for teenagers

Fresh pork cuts carry lower prices

This is the time of year when one can expect to enjoy often the delicious fragrance of fresh pork roasting in the oven or of chops frying in the skillet. Pricewise, pork probably will be lower for the remainder of the year than it has been in recent months, says Mrs. Letts Jasper, UK Extension specialist in marketing and consumer information.

To determine which pork cut is the best buy is not dependent alone on the price per pound, but also on the number of servings that a pound will make.

Spareribs, for example, are often priced lower than other cuts, but it must be remembered that the cut is well named for the meat on the ribs is really "spare." In fact, one pound of this cut can be counted on to make only one and a half servings, so for a family of four, 6 pounds would be necessary.

In contrast, says Mrs. Jasper, one pound of shoulder roast or blade steak will make three servings; of lean roast or whole ham, two and a half servings, or of lean chops, four servings.

A little quick arithmetic at the store, or an analysis of the weekly advertisements, will show which cut is the best buy by dividing the cost per pound by the number of servings per pound as given above.

to make up at other meals, or by between-snacks, the food missed at breakfast.

The survey showed that among junior high school students, only one child in five ate enough of the right foods at other meals to make up for the skimpy breakfast.

Among 17 to 19-year-old college girls, those who skipped breakfast cut their daily intake to less than two-thirds of their calcium and vitamin C needs, and to 10 percent of iron and thiamine quotas. Nor was it effective as a reducing plan, for the breakfast skippers were much more likely to eat snacks between meals, which were usually sweets or other high calorie foods, making the total calories greater than if they had eaten breakfast.

Studies of diets of 15-to-20-year-olds in the Northeast states showed that those who ate breakfast were more likely to get the kinds and amounts of food needed than were those who went without, particularly in calcium and vitamin C.

Late TV or other entertainment often leads to late sleeping in the morning, which is no exchange for a good breakfast, says the food specialist.

"Breakfast is a health investment in which both teenagers and parents should cooperate, she said.

Apple crop adds to menu variety

The large apple crop is reason enough for scores of apple pies and cobblers, but many other apple delicacies will add variety and interest to menus, say Extension home economists at the University of Kentucky.

These suggestions for some uses for apples come from the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Fried Apples and Bacon: Fare tart apples and cut into cubes to make a quart. Fry strips of bacon in a heavy skillet until crisp, then drain on absorbent paper. To 2 tablespoons of bacon fat in the skillet add the apples and 2 tablespoons of sugar. Cover and cook slowly until apples are tender. Remove cover, turn apples gently and let them brown and become transparent. Serve on hot platter with the bacon. Thin slices of ham, salt pork or sausage may be used in place of the bacon.

Glazed Apple Rings: Cook together 1 cup of sugar, 1 cup of water and ¼ teaspoon of salt for 10 minutes. Add 2 tablespoons of butter. Wash, core and pare four large firm apples and cut into three or four thick slices. Place the apple rings in a single layer in a shallow buttered pan and pour the hot syrup over them. Cover and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, until tender. Remove cover and continue cooking until the syrup is thick and slightly browned. Turn the apples occasionally. Serve the hot apples with main course of a meal, or chill and serve as a relish.

Cider Gelatin Salad: Soak 2 tablespoons of gelatin in ½ cup of cold cider. Heat 2 cups of cider to the boiling point and pour into the gelatin, stirring until it is dissolved. Strain and chill. When the gelatin begins to set, add 1 cup chopped apples, ½ cup chopped celery, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley or green pepper and ¼ cup chopped nuts. Pour into individual molds which have been rinsed with cold water. Serve with mayonnaise on lettuce.

Blushing Apple Salad: Make a syrup of 2 cups of water and 1 cup of sugar and cook three minutes. Pare and core firm, tart apples. Cover with syrup and add enough red cinnamon candies to make the apples rose color. Cook covered, gently, until the apples are tender. Drain the apples, chill and serve with cottage or shredded cream cheese on lettuce with mayonnaise.

For green minted apples, tint the syrup with green coloring, and add about 3 drops of peppermint oil for flavoring. Delightful with lamb.

BREAD AND CAKE CHOICE

By Edward Earl Lee

EVER afterward Louise Bryant never ceased to marvel over how quickly she chose between Eugene Jeffers and Paul Eddicks. It began the night Paul called for her and she had said:

"Maybe I shouldn't go, Paul."

"Why not?"

Eugene said I couldn't possibly win that Amateur Hour Contest."

"Gosh, Louise, I don't know," sighing. Oh, I know that's no guarantee you'll win, but, you've been trying to compete in reason enough for trying."

"I . . . I don't know."

However, Paul had persuaded Louise. But once backstage and recognizing the caliber of her competitors, she had misgivings. Therefore, to allay those jitters the girl forced herself to think of her two suitors.

Eugene, with five years of steady progress behind him, was on the way to business success. Each decision was studied carefully, so invariably he was correct.

Paul was content with his auto mechanic job. His decisions were based on the moment's whim. So, Louise reasoned, was usually unexpected experiences.

Louise realized that each suitor revealed to her in his own distinct way.

Louise's thoughts were interrupted by the backstage call to all contestants. They milled about, readying themselves in order of their appearances. Standing in the wings and watching those entrants who preceded her performance, Louise realized she was far outclassed. Therefore the girl experienced no disappointment upon being eliminated early. However, one consolation which warmed her heart was the memory of Paul's rooting in her behalf.

Outside, Paul waited for her alongside the stagedoor exit. "Tough break, Louise," he consoled.

"Thanks, Paul. But, I had an idea it took more than I had."

"Don't let that throw you. Remember, no matter what the odds are against you, if you want to tackle something—go ahead and do it. As for me, well . . . I'll always consider you the best in singing, singing . . . in short, you're the best in everything as far as I'm concerned."

The sincere way in which he expressed that compliment affected her immensely. To keep him from knowing just how much, Louise hastened to say:

"Excuse me a moment, Paul, while I call Eugene. I promised to let him know, soon as possible, how I made out in the contest."

From one of the public phones in the theatre lobby, Louise placed that call. She hardly had finished relating the result when Eugene, breaking in, said:

"Just as I predicted—remember?"

"Yes, I remember. You're usually right, aren't you?"

"Oh—why yes, Eugene."

"I had just told you that Thursday night is the most convenient evening I could call on you. Is that suitable to you?"

"Now that I think of it, no."

"Well," he asked somewhat testily, "what evening will be satisfactory?"

"None. You see, Paul proposed to me just last time we went out. I promised to give him his answer when as I made up my mind. I have been uncertain for quite some time. However, certain events this evening were what decided me. I am going to accept Paul's proposal. Goodbye, Eugene."

THEY SHOWED US THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS

The Pilgrims came as strangers to a wild land, and none of them knew which day would be the last.

Never in the old country had they known such a winter as the wind so cold, the food so scare, the enemy night so filled with dread.

Never had they worked so hard, paying with aching backs for every shelter raised against the cutting wind.

Everywhere they went, Famine and Death watched them with pale expectant eyes. And by the end of that bitter year, there was hardly one among them who had not lost to the cold earth someone he could not live without.

Then these men and women who had nothing sat down to a hearty feast, filled with gratitude for what they had.

We who follow them sometimes wonder why. Did they know some secret of happiness, denied to us, that made them so glad for so little?

And then we think back—back to some personal wilderness we have all been through in our time. Perhaps there was a day when simply to feel the sun again, to smell another morning's freshness, to hear a child laugh again was miracle enough—a time when just to find oneself alive was a gift beyond belief. They had their lives, no man has more.

They had freedom, too. They were where they wanted to be. They could go where they chose to go. All the days ahead were theirs to live as they pleased. They owned themselves, no man owns more.

Remembering this, we join their feast, brothers to all the wise men whom trouble has taught to look at what they have, and not at what they lack.

Most of you know the outcome of the ballgame last Friday but I'll tell you anyway, just to make sure. Paris beat us 32-40. Until the last three minutes we were sailing high right along with Paris, but then something happened. I really don't know what it was. I looked around to see if anyone had broken a mirror or if those greyhounds had put a ladder over our door but I didn't see a thing. Our boys really played a wonderful game. If they play that well for the first game, think what they'll do at the last one. Poor M.M.I. Tut-Tut.

I told you the Rotary Club was giving the annual football banquet last Thursday but I had no idea there would be so much food. Turkey and all the trimmings plus some. So we all crawled home and dreamed about turkeys and footballs.

While I'm discussing the banquet, let me say the Home Ec girls did a wonderful job decorating the tables and cafeteria. They had the football field, footballs, streamers, and even a bouquet of flowers shaped like a football. By the grape vine, I heard some of the Home Ec boys made the streamers. Mt. Zion homemakers

The Mt. Zion homemakers met Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 19, at 1 o'clock C.S.T. at the Annex of Carlisle Baptist Church. Miss Elizabeth Watson at representative from Kentucky Utilities talked about indoor and outdoor lighting and showed some slides on Christmas Decorating and colors to use to bring out green in your decorating.

After the slides women show the minutes of last meeting were given by Emma Sloan. Roll called and treasurer report given. $1.00 was sent to Book Fund. Landscape notes given by Minnie Straw. A few games were enjoyed by our group of them for they did a wonderful job while representing us.

Unually you see at the end of a column Buenos Dias or Hasta la Vista but I think I'll say it in just plain good ole English. Goodbye.
