Falls injure three people

Nicholas County residents were treated at the local hospital for injuries suffered in accidents, two of them hurt in falls while hanging tobacco.

Andrew Grey, 52, fell when a tier rail broke in a tobacco barn owned by his brother, Leon Grey, on the Lower Jackstown Road. The injured man was admitted to the Nicholas County hospital for treatment of three broken ribs and a fractured collarbone.

Leo Brumagen fell while hanging tobacco in a barn owned by Cecil Alexander in the Myers section of the county, but landed on his feet and suffered only a badly sprained and bruised heel. He was released from the hospital after receiving first aid and an X-ray examination.

Mrs. Sallie Ritchie, 83, was admitted to the hospital suffering from a fracturered pelvis which she suffered last Wednesday in a fall at her home near Barterville.

William Lewis, 63, of Henryville was a patient two days last week, treated for heat prostration at the local hospital. He became ill while hanging tobacco in the barn of J. Berry Burnaw.

Tobacco black shank disease may be wide spread in County

Tobacco Black Shank disease may be much more widely spread in Nicholas County this year than most growers realize, William T. Straw, County Agent said this week. Many of the tobacco fields that producers think are affected merely by drowned out tobacco, may in reality be infected with the dreaded Black Shank disease.

Tobacco affected by Black Shank resembles drowned out tobacco caused by excess water and may be confused. In order to facilitate growers who may have drowned-out tobacco this season, the County Agent's Office had designated Tuesday, September 9 as the date for taking samples of diseased tobacco to the Kentucky Experiment Station for identification purposes. Any grower wishing to have a tobacco sample sent in for identification should bring a sample to the Extension Office on Monday, September 8 or early Tuesday morning, September 9. There will be no cost assessed for identification of the disease.

Now that Nicholas County's Burley Crop is being housed rapidly, most growers will soon be discing tobacco fields and sowing to small grain. All samples of tobacco turned in for identification should be removed from the field before discing. Diseased plants should be carefully placed in a light paper bag, so that soil will not be carelessly scattered; thereby increasing the danger of spreading the disease.

Black Shank Identified On Four Farms Last Week

Tobacco Black Shank disease was identified by the Kentucky Experiment Station last week on four new farms in Nicholas County. In all cases the trouble was suspected as merely drowned out tobacco from excess water. Typical of the problem is the case of James C. Lowe and Ewell Clinkenbeard in their tobacco crop located on the farm of Allie Clinkenbeard near the Moorefield road, adjoining Carlisle. The diseased tobacco in this field was thought to be merely drowned out tobacco; however, laboratory examination has definitely established the fact that this tobacco has Black Shank.

This disease usually does minor damage the first year it appears in a tobacco field. However, the second season, if the field is returned to tobacco, the problem magnifies greatly and causes extensive losses. The producers will find it greatly to his advantage to learn as early as possible if tobacco Black Shank is present, in order that steps can be taken immediately for the control of the disease.
