I went back to putting up food

but now I freeze it

You will, too, once you find how easy it is to freeze food for future use. Many a woman who gave up the hot, heavy chore of canning has gone back to putting up food — the modern easy way . . . in a freezer.

In these days of high food prices, it really pays to freeze foods for future use. You can buy seasonal fruits and vegetables—when prices are lowest — then enjoy them during off season when high prices might put them out of reach. Yes, you live better now with a home freezer handy in your home.

5¢ a day is all you pay to freeze food the modern electric way. This is the average cost with our low electric rates.

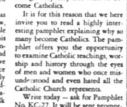
"...No Priest Could Ever Convince ME!"



la the beginning of his search for religious truth, the Catholic man wouldn't even consider the Catholic Faith.

He admits now that he didn't just "close the first thing" about the Mass, but had the impression that it was a strange practice "belonging to the Dark Ages." A priest, he thought at the time, was a person of dubious character "of whom the people lived in mortal terror."

Even if I had been interested in the Catholic Faith," he says now, "I would no more have knocked on a rectory door than I would have entered a lion's den. I would not have allowed myself to be dragged in!"

But if the Catholic religion was repellent to him, as he says now, the young man was equally unable to find any other answer to his craving for spiritual certainty. Indeed, he had ceased to attend church altogether and began to have serious doubts about the existence of God. He was, he explains, only trying to prove his unbelief—unconscious when he accepted the invitation of a Catholic friend to talk with a priest.

"I was sure," he explains today, "that no priest could convince me that there was anything for me in this Roman church, despite the fact that we agreed on many fundamentals."

But a chain of happenings and circumstances stretched over several years, and including the visit to the priest . . . have brought this young man into the Catholic Church. And his mother and sister are converts, too. Some people undoubtedly will attribute this to the persuasiveness of the priest . . . but the young convert himself says: "It was the grace of God."

Non-Catholics are often puzzled, even shocked, when someone they know decides to become a Catholic. This, the young man explains, is due to the fact that Catholic life and practices are difficult for non-Catholics to understand. It is because of this that the Church constantly holds forth its invitation to non-Catholics to investigate Catholic teaching and worship, even though they may not wish to become Catholics.

It is for this reason that we here invite you to read a highly interesting and complete explaining why so many become Catholics. The pamphlet offers you the opportunity to examine Catholic teachings, worship and history through the eyes of men and women who once misunderstood and even hated all the Catholic Church represents.

Write today — ask for Pamphlet No. KC-27. It will be sent promptly and without charge—in a plain wrapper. And nobody will call on you.

Educational Problem One That's Acute

There is a growing concern on the part of agricultural educators at the college level about the general decline in enrollment of students in agricultural courses at colleges and universities.

With some exceptions, the land-grant colleges across the country have seen a noticeable drop in the number of freshman applications for admission to their schools of agriculture. Of those that are not witnessing a decrease in numbers over previous years, many see a drop-off percentage wise, in agricultural enrollment.

In the institutions other than those that are federally supported—that offer agriculture courses, the same thing seems to be occurring. What is the reason for this?

"High school counselors, principally," say the educators. It seems that many of these counselors, whose responsibility it is to analyze a young prospective student's interests, inclinations, and mental capabilities and to help him arrive at a logical course of study for college, have a "closed mind" with regard to any college training for students in the field of professional agriculture. Then too, many of the other professions have been glamorized, perhaps overly so, with respect to salaries, opportunities, adventure, and even romance Of late, information disseminated by the mass media alone has made a lasting impression on youngsters of all ages, on those who now dream of being great scientists instead of cowboys, engineers instead of forest rangers, chemists instead of big league ball players. But few people, anymore, seem to pay much attention to the very basic science that's as old as man himself—that of producing food. Farms are getting larger and farmers are getting fewer

What will be the result of this trend? Isn't it conceivable that we might someday have an over supply of engineers? Do we now have a sufficient number of people to adequately serve the economy in a field that previously offered great public respect and financial reward—the law profession" You may rest assured that we will one day have a great need for more college trained agriculturalists to help the many complexities of the industry, if the present trend continues.

Farm Bureau is greatly interested in the field of education. It is the desire of the organization and of its members that each college student be properly fitted in the field that most nearly coincides with his interests and abilities. It is highly possible that some students are being mis-placed these days, that the fascinating and rewarding field of professional agriculture has something to offer them—and they it. Think it over.

Use caution select clothing for vacation

Comfortable, practical and attractive should describe clothing for vacation trips and camping, says Miss Rachel Rowland, UK Extension clothing specialist.

Look for clothes that do not soil easily, that are wrinkle-resistant, and that are wash-and-wear, she suggests. Wrinkle resistant cottons and rayons, that are a product of blends of dacron, cotton and silk are all good choices in fabrics. All-over prints, plaids or checks usually show wrinkles less than solid colors. Medium and dark colors will look fresh longer than pastels.

Choose clothes to fit your particular vacation. Clothes that are comfortable while sitting in the car yet trim and attractive for restaurants and sight-seeing afternoons are really good for motor trips.

Aim for a neat, well-groomed appearance in your casual clothes. A blouse and skirt or sweater and dress that are matched or coordinated in color are more attractive than a halter-skaller combination. The smart woman is very selective in when and where she wears shorts or slacks, according to Miss Rowland.

Even in midsummer, include some cool knit or other clothes, she recommends. A jacket, sweater, poncho or stole insures comfort for cool nights and in air-conditioned buildings. Since all your vacation days may not be sunny, take along some kind of rain wear, too. Warm socks and sturdy shoes are necessities for camping, as sandals or canvas shoes do not give enough support and protection.

Finally, having a check-off list helps while packing. Miss Rowland says; this prevents forgetting some essential article or garment in all the excitement of leaving.

London club operates water mill at park

Frankfort, July 21 — The London Garden Club, organized two years ago to beautify London and surrounding territory with flowers and shrubs in their natural state, has taken on a new project — operation of picturesque McHargle Water Mill in nearby Levi Jackson Wilderness Road State Park.

With proceeds from the sale of waterground meal from the mill, the club members expect to further their original undertaking.

Profits from the mill will be used in landscaping the park and planting shrubs and flowers.

Operation of the mill by the garden club was suggested by Park Supt. Gabbard. Business has so flourished that the gardeners have had to make a reorder of a thousand souvenir sacks in which they market the waterground meal. Only old fashioned hickory cane corn is used, no hybrids.

The McHargue Mill, among the first structure to be developed in the Levi Jackson Park, is made up of millstones that have been in continuous use in Laurel County since 1812. In the mill yard and on the border of the mill stream is the largest collection of millstones in the world.

Plastic film misuse alarms health department

"The Kentucky State Department of Health has become increasingly concerned about the possibility of more Kentucky children being suffocated from the misuse of plastic film," Russell E. Teague, M.D., Commissioner of Health, said today.

The deaths of two Kentucky children have been confirmed as plastic-connected by the State Health Department, and both deaths resulted from the use of thin plastic bags on bedding. Dr. Teague said. Another suffocation death is being investigated at the present time.

Under the Department's investigation procedure, information from death certificates which list suffocation as the cause is given to the Accident Control Section. If the suffocation was due to plastic, further investigation is made as to details of the death.

As part of a campaign to alert the public to the danger of thin plastic film, the Department has prepared a leaflet — "Caution! Plastics Can Kill!—to be distributed through county health departments to drycleaning establishments, dress factories, grocery stores throughout the State.

The leaflet, which will be passed out to customers of the establishments, points out the danger of using flimsy plastic material to cover pillows and mattresses and of letting infants and small children play with plastic bags.

Similar to Public Health Service figures, 49 cases of suffocation occured in the country between January 1 and June 15. The victims ranged in age from 13 days to three years, and 41 were less than one year old. Since reporting of these cases is voluntary, it is possible that there have been more.

"These deaths are needless," Dr. Teague said. "It is hoped that our campaign to inform the people of Kentucky of the hazards of this material will help prevent additional tragedies."

Use these tips in air-conditioning home furnishings

Home furnishings have fads and fashions just as clothing does, according to Kathryn Sebree, UK Extension specialist in home furnishing.

A furnishings cycle usually covers a period of from four to seven years, she says, and can become outdated unless some changes are made during this time. As points to check in bringing your home up-to-date, Miss Sebree offers these suggestions:

Arrange furniture in usable groups, not in a haphazard fashion or with each piece by itself. Pictures need to be near and a part of a furniture grouping. A large-enough lamp to give workable light should be placed with each seating arrangement. Check lampshades not only for beauty, but for how well they prevent glare while still allowing adequate lighting.

Slipcovers, upholstery, curtains and rugs should blend well in color, texture and pattern. A problem in many homes is too much pattern or too many dominant colors, giving a restless appearance.

The walls of the room should make a pleasant background for the furnishings, lending an effect of space rather than being dark and dreary.

Accessories need to be beautiful in color and design and serve a useful purpose in the room. Too many accessories give a cluttered look.

White, starched, crocheted doilies on furniture are out-date. If it is necessary to protect a piece of furniture, the scarf or protector should blend with the color of wood, slip cover or upholstery.

These are some of the ways you can give your home a more modern look, says Miss Sebree.

STARDOM has a way of being rewarded with startling suddenness in TV and it zooms hitherto unknown actors into the public spotlight before the film folks or their own wives have had time to dry . . . Such is the story of Edward Byrnes who shares top billing with Efrem Zimbalist, Jr., and Connie Stevens in ABC-TV's "77 Sunset Strip" series . . . Eddie made a test under the direction of Gordon Douglas . . . Director liked what he saw in it and decided to cast him as the West Coaster in the film, "Tall Texan" . . . Byrnes is "Destry's Rangers." Next he showed up on "Cheyenne" playing all sorts of small parts . . . "Cheyenne," and other TV loplners being filmed on his home lot . . . Byrnes was born in Yorkville, Kentucky, but moved to Hollywood in 1956 after starting his career as a TV actor and appearing in several off-Broadway plays and in Limbach, Ohio, where he got his arrival on the west coast. Edd appeared on many TV shows including "Lux Video Theatre," "Playhouse 90," "Matinee Theatre," "Crossroads," "Wire Service" and "Mary Lee."

He had leading roles in "Oh, Captain!" and "Alcoholics Anonymous" in addition to "Four Stefhen Out," for Paramount, he also appeared in the Sing Theatre production of "Tea and Sympathy." . . . As Keshie, he nearly runs off with a promising portion of the interest in "77 Sunset Strip." . . . A lovely reason he doesn't come completely steal the best reviews in that Zimbalist and Smith also offer fascinating characterizations.

Byrnes lives in a bachelor apartment in the Hollywood Hills . . . It is decorated with bullfight posters . . . He has an extensive record collection, both modern and semi-classical, and a hi-fi set which he built himself . . . He is an avid sports car enthusiast.

IN the not-too-distant past, when the shades of night began to fall on lake or stream, the bait caster put his reel away, closed his tackle box and headed for home. But, this was before some die-hard angler discovered that long, hot days and cool moonlight nights are a combination which make evening hours the ideal time to catch black bass and a variety of other sport fish.

Where fresh water fishing is concerned, the night-time hours have changed almost exclusively to the catfish enthusiasts. Armed bait casters spending a weekend at their favorite fishing camp would set still a few "limbs" line or a trotline baited for cats, just to catch a few fish when it was "too dark" to cast for bass or bream. But, this was all before some guy who wouldn't quit bored out the big, lunker bass like to feed at night and will take an artificial lure as readily in the dark as in the early morn. How dark the night-time for fish is a question someone else will have to answer.)

Some tips for night-time bass fishing: Unless you are an expert caster, use spinning gear; Bedclothes and "bird's nests" are bad enough in the daylight. Start out with a big water popping bait and don't be afraid to make noise with it, particularly if you are fishing a lake where trees and other cover extend several feet from the shoreline. Keep other noise and movement in the canoe at a minimum. Be sure that you have a good flashlight or lantern, with extra batteries and fuel. Pick familiar waters if you can. If you remember landmarks from daylight observations, you will be surprised how well you can see in the night when your eyes become adjusted to the darkness.
