Kincaid wins

In accepting the bronze plaque award, he will find himself in the company of former President Herbert Hoover, Elder Statesman Bernard Baruch, World War I Ace Eddie Rickenbacker, J. C. Penney, and Dr. Milton Eisenhower — all recipients of the Award in previous years.

The Awards are made each year by the non-profit Horatio Alger Award Committee of the Association which represents approximately five hundred institutions of learning throughout the United States.

Winners were chosen by ballot from 5,000 campus leaders.

The Award got its name from the fictional Horatio Alger novels of yesteryear. The time novels stress the American Free Enterprise System which enables a youth to rise above his humble beginnings and attain success in his field by the sweat of hard work, honesty and determination.

Caroline Kincaid's career reads like a typical Horatio Alger novel. He was born in Lee County about halfway between Beattyville and Jackson in the tiny community of Tallega.

Garvice never went hungry and he was never forced to wear ragged clothes like many of the heroes of the Alger novels. But, he did come from a modest-income family and learned the meaning of hard work while still a youth.

He sold newspapers, cleaned old bricks from demolished buildings, worked in a grocery store and performed other odd jobs.

When he went to the University of Kentucky he continued to work to pay his own way and when he decided to go on to law school, he managed to borrow $1,500 and bought three small houses at auction in Lexington and sold them at a profit. This helped him to finance his law school tuition.

After graduation he practiced law and dabbled in real estate on the side. Within the next four years he bought and sold several hundred residential properties.

The Golden Text is from Psalms (66: 5): "Thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee."

KEA report is made

by Charles Wilson, Principal, NCHS

The Kentucky Educational Association was held in Louisville last week, April 20-23. We are happy that a number of Nicholas County teachers attended and enthusiasm for this professional meeting is greatly increasing.

The program was opened by a general assembly of all teachers. Miss Grace Weller, president-elect, presided. Addresses were given by Governor Bert T. Combs, Mr. Harry Sparks, retiring president of KEA, and Mr. Wendell P. Butler, State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

There were affiliate group meetings held for every phase of education.

Miss Ellis, our home economics teacher reports, "The Home Economics Teachers section of KEA had as its theme for their meeting "The Creative Teacher". Miss Florine Vatter, supervisor of home economics in the Cincinnati schools spoke on "The Creative Teacher and Quality Education." She emphasized the many qualities of the creative teacher and the need for the teacher to keep in mind the individual worth of each student. Mrs. Adron Doran of Morehead, Kentucky, spoke on "The Creative Teacher Looks the Part." She showed the group how to use the dress dress for many occasions by using different accessories.

The Kentucky Vocational Association had as its speaker, Dr. Willard Goslin, Professor of Education at George Peabody College. He told the vocational teachers that there needed to be balance in education."

It is through attending our professional meetings of KEA and other associations that teachers can keep abreast with all that is new in our profession to provide better education for our boys and girls.

I had the privilege to attend a new type meeting that may have great possibilities here in Kentucky. It was given by the Audio Visual Association and entitled. "Air Borne Television Teaching."

This program is going into effect in September and is sponsored by Purdue University where an air plane will broadcast three hours per day in the field of foreign languages, science, and mathematics. Dr. Goslin stated, "The best of teachers will be chosen for this job and if a school can provide the television sets this type of teaching should supplement the class room teacher in an untold way."

On July 18 the University of Kentucky will hold a workshop for teachers on this subject.

Miss Hazel Swartz, Supervisor, reported, "The teachers of Nicholas County grade school are greatly enjoyed the educational exhibits at the Kentucky Hotel. We gathered information about library books, testing techniques and modern class room aids."

Mrs. Elizabeth Clay, county lunch room director, attended the newly organized section of KEA for School Lunch Personnel. At that meeting, Mr. Don Hale, Head of the Bureau of Instruction, welcomed the school lunch program as now a part of the Bureau of Instruction. Mr. Bale emphasized the education of the whole child and in that the school lunch program is indispensable.

N. C. teachers all hold qualified certificates

Nicholas County was one of the four County Systems in Kentucky that employed all teachers holding regular certificates for the positions in which they are employed during 1959-60. The other three Counties were Caldwell, Fayette and Nelson, Lexington. This is the second year for Nicholas County to hold this classification.

Not only are the teachers all qualified in the Nicholas County system, but they also rank high on preparation. The State average of non-college graduates for Kentucky was 28% while the non-college graduates for Nicholas County schools was less than 18%.

In 1944-45 over half of the teachers of Kentucky were not college graduates. The State has shown continuous progress in increasing the training of its teachers over the past 15 years and with the new program adopted by the 1960 session of the Kentucky General Assembly the state should soon have all teachers with a degree.

Since Cooper's election to Senate in 1956 they have lived in Washington. Mrs. Cooper's talk will compare life as a senator's wife to that of an ambassador's wife.

Washington Reports

BY YOUR CONGRESSMAN

JOHN WATTS

France's De Gaulle

Congress meets in joint session Monday to hear and to honor France's President Charles de Gaulle, a man who has become at this same time legendary figure and a world leader.

The French President arrived with his wife in Washington Friday greeted by a 21-gun salute, amid thousands of tri colors, cheering crowds and a 12-band escort along the parade route.

This same man who resisted Nazi occupation by leading a free France now serves as the Fifth Republic's President. His wife and children expect to join him in Maine.

In just two years, the leadership of De Gaulle, has given France a political stability that has enabled her business men to plan ahead and thus to steadily finance economically her economy is booming as never before—faster than West Germany or Russia. In 1959, French steel output topped 15 million tons for the first time in history.

Their new constitution, replacing a political system characterized by toppling Cabinets, has given France new inspiration, new boldness in planning and for the future of France. Thus, only 12 months after entering the nuclear field France was able to explode her first nuclear bomb, and to make further atomic tests.

True, De Gaulle's objectives and methods sometimes respected France's position in the West-ern Nations' councils present very serious and important political questions. But they merit our most careful consideration and effort to compose whatever differences there may be with our own policies.

Certainly the strength of De Gaulle's personality and his knowledgeableness will be an asset to the Western powers at the Summit meeting. With good will on the part of all concerned, there should be no problems between France and the United States and the other Western Nations which cannot be resolved for the common good of all in a united stand for democratic principles.

Need For European Trade Reorganization

The post World War II economic era, during which many European Nations were through a reconstruction period, has clearly come to an end. And with it, it has now been proposed that the Organization for European Economic Cooperation, formed of 18 nations over a decade ago to aid European Plan, be modernized to meet new needs. In this, grouping rather than participating as advisers and counsellors, it is suggested the United States and Canada become members.

Most countries which decparately required assistance in the postwar years for economic survival are now prospering But many believe that our experience in working together with other nations in the past to solve economic problems show that cooperation on an active partnership basis is necessary and will be mutually beneficial in the years to come.

The proposed new economic alliance would emphasize trade policies, while maintaining aid agreements where they are needed Now that many more nations are able to compete in trade markets, the agreements would directly control the sale of American goods abroad which, in turn, would in turn affect jobs, budgets, taxes and the entire economy

Studies and planning of the proposed reorganization have been going on among the country to keep well abreast of developments becomes obvious Whether or not we participate as active members, we must at least be prepared to insure that American "exports" get a fair shake in any trade deals that may be agreed upon.

The Nicholas County Board of Education received a letter from Miss Jane Lewis, Supervisor of School Lunch program, giving an evaluation of the lunch program, the personnel and director in the County schools. Miss Lewis visited the lunch rooms during the first week in April.

Her evaluation included the changes that have been made at the Nicholas County grade school including the re-decoration of the dining room, the new storage, new serving counter, and the new tables for serving the children.

In commenting on the school lunch workers she stated, "There was a definite feeling of cooperation, cheerfulness and eagerness among the school lunch workers and principals to have a good type A meal served to the children." She also added, "May I say I am well pleased with the type A meals served to the children of Nicholas County."
