DECEMBER, 1960

BIG BUSINESS—A few days ago, while attending an Agricultural Credit conference in Denver, along with several Kentucky bankers, I had an opportunity to visit one of the country's largest beef cattle feeding operations. On a 160 acre tract, there were 29,000 head of cattle and feed. Every foot of land was covered with feed lots, roads, silo or feed mixers. The silo is an enormous hole in the ground, about a half acre in area and 30 feet deep. It holds over 50,000 tons of silage. In addition to the silage, 4½ million bushels of grain (equivalent to the yield on nearly 50,000 Kentucky acres) and enormous quantities of alfalfa and supplements are used.

Feeder cattle are bought, and fat cattle sold, five days a week. Feeders are brought all the way from Mississippi to Arizona, and from Montana to Texas. The value of the cattle now on feed is over six million dollars.

An interesting fact about the operation is that it was started as a side line by a school teacher some thirty years ago. The first year he sold two truck loads of cattle; now he and his son, who is a partner in the business; buy, fatten and sell between 60,000 and 70,000 head each year, enough to supply all the beef for over 600,000 people.

AN OPPORTUNITY—As we talked to farm bankers from all over the country, we were impressed with the opportunities in Kentucky to improve pastures and expand production of cattle. Bankers and cattle feeders from the corn belt were very complimentary about the feeder cattle coming out of Kentucky and complained only because they could not find larger quantities. Cattle production in Kentucky is limited only by our ability to produce pastures. Expensive buildings are not needed, as is proved by many farmers who winter their cattle only in the protection of woods or thickets. Nor is grain needed for some types of cattle operations—the entire feed requirements can be obtained from pastures

MONEY SHORTAGE—Some rural communities are finding themselves in the same position as Uncle Sam is in with reference to the movement of gold from the United States to foreign countries. On the national scale the trouble is caused by the imbalance of trade between the United States and other countries. We have been buying and giving more than we have been selling. In rural communities, the shortage of money is caused by the movement of money from the country to the cities. When cash and surplus funds are kept in local banks it is used to supply the credit needs of the community and thereby helps develop local agriculture and industry. In recent years much of the cash surplus in rural communities has been sent to larger centers where it is used to finance city homes, shopping centers, bowling alleys and the like, sometimes leaving the farming communities short of cash for productive purposes. With this condition taking place at the present time it is advisable that farmers who expect to need credit next year make arrangements soon to obtain it. Competition for credit is expected to be keen in 1961 so the wise borrower will be prepared to get in on the ground floor. The situation would be helped, too.

Hudnall-Miller Vows Said Saturday

Miss Dessie Ann Hudnall and Mr. Virgil Kenneth Miller were united in marriage in a candlelight ceremony at the Mt. Locks Church November 26 at 7:30 p.m. The vows were exchanged before a background of white mums, greenery and candelabra, lighted tapers and greenery decorated each window.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Harold D Hamm, Frankfort, Kentucky Traditional wedding music was furnished by Miss Mary Frances Fisher, Carlisle.

The bride's matron of honor, Miss Alma Dean Hudnall of Cincinnati, sang "Oh Promise Me" and "We'll Walk Alone" before the ceremony and "The Lord's Prayer" during the ceremony

The bride was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Mr Ernest W. Palas of Richmond. Her waltz-length gown of Chantilly lace over taffeta was styled with a full skirt. The fitted bodice, with bateau neckline which dipped low in the back, and the elbow length sleeves were trimmed with Satin bows. She wore wrist-length gloves. Her shoulder-length veil of silk illusion was attached to a tiara of seed pearls. The bride's bouquet was a white orchid surrounded by lilies of the valley

Miss Lucille Williams of Lawrenceburg served as maid of honor. Her gown of pink eyelet organdy over taffeta was fashioned similar to that of the bride. A taffeta cumberbund ended in streamers at the back. She carried a cascade arrangement of pink carnations and snowdrop mums.

Mr. Albert Miller of London served his brother as best man. Ushers were Mr. John McKinney of Paris and Mr. Melvin Miller of Lexington, the groom's brother

The bride's mother wore a silk-print dress of blue-green with matching hat and black accessories. The groom's mother wore a grey wool ensemble with black accessories. They were corsages of gardenias.

A reception followed in the basement of the Church. The bride's table, covered with an embroidered ivory linen cloth was centered by a three-tiered cake topped by wedding bells. Assisting at the reception were Mrs. Jayne Stephens, Lexington, sister of the groom; Mrs. Luther Anderson, Carlisle; Mrs John McKinney, Paris; Mrs. Milton Masterson, Alexandria, Virginia, sister of the bride, and Mrs. Earnest Palas, Richmond, sister of the bride.

For the wedding trip, Mrs. Miller was attired in a dress with matching plaid jacket of olive green wool. Her accessories were black and she wore the orchid from her wedding bouquet.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hudnall of Barterville. She is a graduate of Nicholas County high school and attended Eastern State College. She is a secretary at the University of Kentucky.

The groom's parents are Mr and Mrs. J. N. Miller of Lexington. He graduated from Henry Clay high school and served two years with the Marine Corps. He is employed by the Kentucky State Police.

FARM BUREAU in Action by Cliffields
Kentucky Farm Bureau Fed.

Farm Act of 1958 Sets Pattern For Future

The Agricultural Act of 1958, which became law, provides formula for cotton, corn, rice and wheat grains on a marketing three-year average of market prices, is now showing results. This is the legislation that was violently opposed by the fixed price and supply-control advocates, who claimed that a low-going of price support levels would cause farmers to produce more—not less.

The recent USDA determination that the outlook for cotton sales during 1961-62 is sufficiently improved to warrant an acreage allotment for 1961 of roughly 2 million acres above that of this year, clearly shows that programs under the new law is benefitting farmers.

Farm Bureau leaders believe that the upswing in demand for cotton is a result of the more competitive pricing of cotton since the new law was passed. The previous law attempted to hold prices at a predetermined level, without regard to market conditions—thus forcing tremendous cuts in acreage. Now that cotton is competitive to price and the market is expanding, cotton farmers can begin to grow more to meet the market demand.

This may not sound important to Kentucky farmers, who grow very little cotton; but the indirect benefits could be most beneficial. The acreage that has been taken out of cotton in the South during the past few years has gone into production of feed grain, corn, wheat, and soybeans. It stands to reason that most of the land that will now return to cotton will restore the production of these grain crops.

Although the Act of 1958 did not carry out Farm Bureau's market price program in full, it was a step in the right direction, and is beginning to work in spite of the handicaps built into it by the Congress. The 1958 Act should not be considered a complete cure-all for all commodities, or, even for those directly affected; but enough is now known to strengthen Farm Bureau's conviction that a similar program should be adopted to cope with the wheat surplus problem. If the politicians will leave the Act alone another year or so, it will begin to produce results from corn.

Surprise awaits Kentuckians in park program

Kentuckians "are going to be pleasantly surprised when they learn the full extent of the state parks program," Governor Bert Combs said recently in announcing "crash program" in park development.

"We intend to have the finest state park system in the nation," Combs added. "Kentucky, because of its scenic virtues, has ideal opportunities for many more parks, and we expect to take full advantage of them.

An earlier announcement had listed only three of the parks for development — Jennie Wiley, Buckhorn Lake and Rough River State Park. "These projects are just a segment of the overall plans," Combs said.

Details of the improvement program will be announced December 8, Combs said after conferring with Parks Commissioner Ed Fox and the Kentucky Parks Board. The program will involve the expenditure of a proved 10 million dollar bond issue.

Purpose of the crash program is to provide Kentucky's to compete immediately with other states in attracting tourists. "We know that in 1959 out-of-state tourists spent $165 million in Kentucky," Combs said. "With added recreation areas and more modern facilities in state parks, the income from tourists can be greatly increased."

Home-killed pork keeps well in freezer

Home-killed pork stored in the freezer will keep its high quality for six months if handled properly, points out Elinabeth Helton, UK Extension specialist in foods and nutrition.

What does "proper handling" include? Miss Helton gives these pointers for the best results in storing home-killed pork in the freezer.

The first rule is "keep it clean." Second comes thorough bleeding. Pork that has been well bled "keeps" longer and tastes better. It's also less likely to stain and soften the wrapper and leak into the freezer when stored.

Meat for freezing should be chilled quickly and thoroughly, she says. Then package the meat carefully and label it with "what" and "when frozen."

Wrapping paper used to package meat for the freezer should be moisture-proof to keep the meat from drying out; it should also resist absorbing blood and fat. Use strong paper that will not tear while the meat is being wrapped or that bones will not puncture. However, the paper should be pliable enough to mold closely around the meat being wrapped, so that air pockets will not be left around the meat.

After wrapping the chilled meat, freeze it quickly at a temperature below zero. If freezing is done at home, be careful not to overload the quick-freeze or sharp-freeze section of the freezer, she recommends. Do not stack packages together until they are hard frozen.

When the quick-freeze section is overloaded, meat freezes more slowly, causing large ice crystals to form in the meat. Large ice crystals puncture the meat cells; this means greater loss of juice during thawing and cooking.

After pork has been hardfrozen, store it at zero degrees or below. Miss Melton does not recommend storing pork in the freezer for longer than six months. Sausage shows loss of flavor after four months storage; however, you can add 1 teaspoon of monosodium glutamate to the seasoning for each 10 pounds of sausage. Home-made sausage keep its good taste for longer than four months.

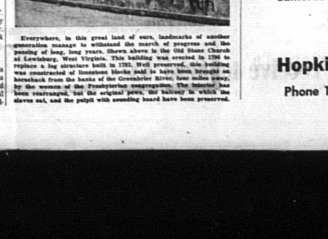
Snapshots: Old Stone Church



Everywhere, in this great land of ours, landmarks of another generation manage to withstand the march of progress and the ravages of the long years. Shown above is the Old Stone Church in Lewisburg, West Virginia. This building was erected in 1796 to replace a log structure built in 1781. Well preserved, this building was constructed of limestone blocks said to have been brought on horseback from the banks of the Greenbrier River, four miles away, by the women of the Presbyterian congregation. The interior has been restrained, but the original pews, the balcony in which the slaves sat, and the pulpit with sounding board have been preserved.
