COOPERATION is a Kentucky tradition!
BUILDING CHURCHES... OR POWER PLANTS!
When a Kentucky community needs a church, it's traditional for all the people to get out and do the job. Whether they donate cash or hard labor, it all adds up to making a beautiful building a tough job over. When you see the church is up, everyone has the pleasant feeling of having done their share along with the neighbors.
Rural electrification is neighborhood cooperation, too. Kentucky's Rural Electric Co-ops... created by folks who get together to make a better life for themselves... are a good example of how neighborhood cooperation serves us. Communities. As the countryside has brightened and prospered, so the townspeople have benefited too. The new rural prosperity made possible by electrification is spent in cities and towns.
