Some recipes call for cooked boned chicken. Yield of cooked meat varies with the size of the bird; larger chickens give a larger proportion of meat to bone. As a rule, one pound of ready-to-cook chicken will yield about 2/3 cup cooked, boned meat.

Use only a few accessories if your room is small, if much pattern is used, or if a window view is important.

First comes the chick. Feed yours Southern States Starting & Growing Mash, then feed with "The 7 Extras," to grow high-producing pullets that pile up more eggs that bring bigger egg checks. Join the Profit Parade. Stock up now on DDT, it may be used either as a 10% dust applied directly through the canvas at the rate of 1 1/2 lbs. per tobacco bed; or if a wettable spray is preferred, the canvas should be removed and the wet spray applied direct to the beds at the rate of 3 tablespoons of 50% wettable DDT per gallon of water, using approximately five gallons of liquid spray per plant bed. The wettable spray should not be applied during the heated part of the day and at least 2 hours time should be allowed for the treatment to dry before beds are watered. As the plants advance in size, repeated applications may be necessary.

Tomato Production

Tomatoes are probably the most popular vegetable crop grown in Kentucky. Not only are they planted in most farm gardens, but many city dwellers set a few plants in the back lawn. The average home gardener sets about 150 plants each year. Too often this number, as large as it is, does not supply the family needs. Some gardeners set as many as 500 to 600 plants but may not have more than the gardener that set only 10 to 15.

Success or failure in tomato growing depends on how well you did the job. A poor job with 10,000 plants may not yield as much fruit as a good job with 10 plants. There is no insurance in number. If blight attacks the patch, it will spread and destroy thousands of plants as easily as one. The more plants a gardener sets the less likely he is to succeed. He soon learns it requires a lot of time to spray or dust to control insects and disease on a large patch. He usually gives up with the hope blight will not be a problem. The gardener using this method is usually disappointed before the season is over.

Why not save time and expenses and at the same time insure an adequate supply of tomatoes. Set 5 to 7 plants per person in the family. Buy from stocky locally grown transplants that are free from disease. Start spraying or dusting by the last week of May and continue at 7 day intervals until the last week of August. This means they will be sprayed or dusted 10 to 12 times, but more important it means you will have tomatoes. Let's compare the methods used by the average gardener and the just described for an average family of five people. First of all, 150 tomato plants would be five times more than the family needs. It would mean 5 times the amount of space in the garden, 5 times the plant and fertilizer cost, 5 times the amount of labor for setting and cultivation. As stated earlier, the average home gardener is not going to spray or dust 150 tomato plants 10 or 12 times. If this job is not done it means the gardener may lose all his time and expense of growing 150 tomato plants. If he had planted 20 or 30 plants and sprayed or dusted regularly he would have spent only about 3 hours labor plus a few cents for material in controlling insects and disease. He would have tomatoes too. Ask yourself this question—can you grow 125 tomato plants with 3 hours of labor, to say nothing of the additional expenses involved.

Spraying is more effective than dusting in controlling blight. Use materials containing Zineb or Maneb for blight control.
