When is Governor disqualified to act?

It is not always clear when a Governor is disqualified to act. In the case of Governor Letcher, the question is whether he is disqualified to act in the event of his death. The Constitution provides that the Governor shall not be disqualified to act in the event of his death. However, the Constitution also provides that the Governor shall not be disqualified to act in the event of his death if he is unable to perform his duties. The question is whether the Governor is disqualified to act in the event of his death if he is unable to perform his duties.
