Hanson Kennedy reflects views of Convention

Hanson Kennedy, representing Nicholas county at Kentucky's 1890 Constitution Convention, reflected the thinking of the majority of that body when he said:

"It would be useless for us to undertake to make a Constitution which shall govern the people for all time to come, for that would be, in effect saying that all wisdom will die with us, and that hereafter the people will not be capable of self-government and that as the years roll by there will be no further advancement and progress. In a government like this, which derives its authority from the consent of the governed, whenever the Constitution or any part of it gets out of joint with the progress of the age and the spirit of the times, and fails to meet the requirements of the people, they have a right to change and adjust it in the new conditions that have arisen in the progress of human events."

Co-Chairmen of Kentucky's Committee for Constitution Improvement, Marlowe Cook, Republican, and Ned Breathitt, Democrat, said this week they thought informed Kentuckians had the same idea on changes in the Constitution as the times dictate.

They said a vote "yes" on the November 3 ballot was simply the people's stamp of approval on a convention call so they may elect delegates to study the constitution in specific areas for possible revision. Any recommendations the convention makes will then be subject to the voters' approval or disapproval in a general election.

At least 213,253 Kentuckians will have to say "yes" on the issue before the legislature can set-up the machinery for the Constitution Convention.

Total output of all red meat this year is expected to be about 27.9 billion pounds—2 percent above last year. Due to smaller imports and the population increase, per person supplies will dip about a pound from the 160 pounds consumed last year. Decline in pork will offset increases in beef and veal.

When outfitting the first-grader, choose clothing he can manage himself. Select clothes with front openings if possible. The clothes should have few and easy-to-use fasteners. Elastic inserts at waistlines are easier for a child to handle than belts.

The average consumer spends 21 percent of his take-home pay on food. If you're spending more than this, check your basket at the supermarket. Are garden materials, kitchen utensils, cleaning supplies, records, magazines and other non-food items picked up there being added to your grocery bill?

Add new life to last year's fall hat by freshening the veil. Place a piece of paper under the veil and cover it with waxed paper. Press with a warm iron—warm enough to melt the wax on the paper. If the paper is waxed only on one side, be sure that side is next to the veil.

When sewing wash-and-wear fabrics, use clay chalk for Wash-and-wear to hold oil of wax products.

Make good use of the many fresh fruits on July's market. Peaches, for example, are delicious with cereal for breakfast, baked with ham as part of the main dish, or in a pie with cream and sugar, or with ice cream for dessert.

Snapshots: Rainstick Junction, U.S.A.

A novel idea is captured in this photograph. Rainstick Junction is not a town, but instead the result of some ingenious thinking on the part of the Chicago and North Western Railway. Established in the downtown terminal at Chicago, Rainstick Jct. is an assortment of uncluttered umbrellas from the road's lost and found department. When there's an unexpected shower at Chicago, commuters caught without a bumbershoot can borrow one from Rainstick Jct. The road relies on the honor system; nothing to sign, no deposit. The commuter just flashes his ticket to an attendant and helps himself to a rainstick. Jeannine Juenger, 10, of Wonder Lake, Illinois, was one of the very first customers.

MEMORIAL: New discoveries in immunization are making protection against many diseases possible, especially against the viral illnesses. Children will appreciate this because most common childhood diseases are caused by viruses.

Of all of them, measles appears to produce the most discomfort and, in some cases, the most serious complications. This has prompted an intensive search for a measles vaccine. Current studies offer hope that one has been found.

At present, measles can be prevented or modified by gamma globulin (passive or temporary immunity). Now at done discriminate whether complete prevention or modification will result. Complete prevention (large dose) is desired in exposures of children under 1, the chronically ill and those in a hospital or institution. This doesn't give the baby a chance to build up his own immunity, so the individual is susceptible to future attacks. Modification, allaying dose of gamma globulin permits the body to develop its own permanent immunity.

Gamma globulin is useful only after a proven or suspected exposure has occurred. What we need is a vaccine which will actively produce immunity, like tetanus and polio vaccines, and protect the patient prior to exposure.

Experiments with a new vaccine promise permanent immunity against measles. Field trials have shown it to be safe and effective so far, but more experience and research is needed before it can be accepted for general use.

From Beulah Crenshaw, Carbondale, Illinois: I remember when summer "Chautauqua Week" was the outstanding event of the whole year in rural-Illinois life. The little hustle and bustle—as the village Dads erected the old-fashioned striped "big-top" in the little town park and roped off one row of parking area benches to accommodate the expected influx of churchgoers.

Even now, in my mind's eye, I can still see the perspiring housewives as they rushed breathlessly from cellar to attic, rounding up surplus pillows for extra bed linens, making frenzied preparations for the entertainment of a host of kith and kin.

"But loads of food were assembled and prepared! No refrigerators, no deep freezers, no cook-ahing gas or electric stoves, and yet each pantry shelf was stocked with an array of juicy, mouth-watering pies and delectable cakes piled high with luscious, lip-licking frostings. Even the most casual peek into the pantry jar afforded a whiff of tantalizing odors and a taste-tempting view of slick brown fingersnaps snuggled lovingly in among the more familiar fruit jars and saucer-shaped sugar-sprinkled confections.

And the cellar—cool, damp and dark! Shall I ever forget the old wooden stave churn filled to the top with golden butter-milk and flanked other side by crocks of fresh, clabbered cream? The bulging shelves that lined the walls—where well-filled jars of fruits and vegetables, neatly affixed to the thrift and industry of a mother who was not unwilling to spend long summer hours in a hot, steamy kitchen.
