At a recent meeting of the Fiscal Court, a quarry site containing about four acres was purchased from A. K. Hostetler and wife. It is located a short distance from Carlisle, near the Moorefield road. Also purchased, after received bids, a caterpillar engine and rock crusher to be used by the county.

A LITTLE YAPPIN'

By Nellie Crump

A Moment to Smile.

Ran across this thought recently: "None of us can get along without a smile. It takes just a moment, but the memory of it sometimes lasts a lifetime. It brings rest to the weary, cheer to the discouraged, sunshine to the sad. It enriches those who receive it without making poorer those who give it. Yet, it cannot be bought, begged, borrowed, or stolen as it has no value to anyone until it is given away." Remember — Smile and the world will smile with you.

Me and Thee Likewise.

This little girl was wading through the snow on her way to Sunday School one of those cold mornings during the winter. A car came to a halt beside her and the lone man asked if she would like to ride. She climbed in beside him. To make a little conversation the man said, "I don't pick up strange little girls, but I know you are all right because you have a Bible in your hand.' As confidently she answered, "I don't get in cars with strange men either, but I know you are all right because you have on a policeman's uniform."

How Long is a Honeymoon?

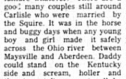
Was talking to a new lady friend on business when some how or other the subject got around to honeymoons. She said she went West and hers lasted eight years, when she moved to Kentucky and eventually near Carlisle. She asked if I watch "Laramie." "I went back there last summer," she said, "it is only a few miles from Cheyene, Wyoming, where I spent some of those eight years and I know that country well—in fact better than Nicholas County."

Then she told me about her relative (possibly her mother) that ran away at the age of 15 to marry her sweetheart 16 years old. (I believe they call them "boy friends" now). In those days it was an easy matter to get married, once the couple got under the parent's watchful eye. A man by the name of Squire Beasley at Aberdeen, Ohio, could, and did, tie many a marriage knot without any further whatever. There are a goo; many couples still around Carlisle who were married by the Squire. It was in the horse and buggy days when any young boy and girl made it safely across the Ohio river between Maysville and Aberdeen, Daddy could stand on the Kentucky side and scream, holler and threaten often cuss all he wanted to. The vows had been spoken at Squire Beasley's little office on the hill long before the ferryboat could make it to Kentucky and back with Papa.

Well, to shorten the story a bit, this is at least one couple who married before old Mr. Whats-his-name made it to the river's edge. He did not object to his son-in-law so much as the fact that he was taking his little daughter "Out West"—and she was anxious to go!

Worn to a frazzle he gave up the chase and waved to the child bride and groom and they waved back, with the mighty Ohio between them. That was the last time that girl ever saw her father! She lived to be 84 years old, never once returning to Kentucky. Just how long is a honeymoon? And you think you got troubles!

Yaps—all . . .



UK QUESTION ANSWER SERVICE

Where are the Loudon and Ingleside castles located in Lexington and are they open to the public? (Charles Pearl, Lebanon)

Loudon and Ingleside castles, which now are more than a hundred years old, were once great private homes patterned after English Tudor manors. The Loudon house, located at Loudon Avenue and Bryan Station Road, is owned by the city as part of Castlewood Park and is open to the public. The once stately Ingleside is now owned by a trailer park and has been divided into private apartments. It is located at the end of Colson Avenue off the Harrodsburg Pike. It is not open to the public.

I would like to know where I could get a picture of all the governors of Kentucky. (Joe Mitchell, Calhoun)

Portraits of Kentucky governors can be found hanging on the walls of the Old Capitol building in Frankfort, the home of the Kentucky Historical Society. Portraits and biographical sketches of many governors have been published in volume 13 of the "National Cyclopaedia of American Biography."

What are the oldest buildings on the University of Kentucky campus?

Three buildings on the UK campus can claim the honor of being the oldest. The Administration Building, the Faculty Club, and White Hall housing the College of Commerce, were all built in 1882. Construction of a new building for Commerce will begin this summer, freeing White Hall for Administration office space.

How many private colleges are there in Kentucky and what is their combined student enrollment? (N. S., Covington)

According to UK's College of Education, there are 27 non-state supported colleges and two junior colleges in the state. The combined enrollment of these schools is above 19,000 students. The six state colleges have a student enrollment of more than 20,000.

4-H Tractor School Completed

The final meeting of the 4-H Tractor School was held Monday night, April 10 at Harper's Garage. There were thirty-five members and leaders present. For a finishing touch, ice cream and cookies were served to the boys. There was also a movie show, "Getting Old Red Ready."

April 24 is the deadline for turning in the completed tractor project books. All boys satisfactorily completing the course will receive a 4-H tractor shirt donated by Harper's and Dunlin's Garages.

There was great assistance rendered during the entire school by Bascom Sorrell, Chester Wood, William Harper, Bill Medley, Sam Burden, W. R. Buntin, Jr., and W. B. Parker.

The Tractor School is an excellent opportunity for a boy to learn the care, operation, and safety precautions needed to successfully and economically operate a tractor.

4-H Rally Day

County 4-H Rally Day is scheduled for Saturday, April 22. There will be both girls and boys demonstrations and girls and boys speeches. All 4-H clubs in the county will have participants in the contest. Time for the rally is 9:30 a.m. at the Nicholas County High School. All parents and interested persons are urged to attend.

American Children are the best cared for in the World—except for their feet

One of every two youngsters in high school age is suffering from some sort of foot ailment —which could have been avoided through closer supervision by parents over shoes and general foot health.

The bones of growing feet are very flexible and therefore can become twisted without a child being aware of more than momentary discomfort. Blisters and small corns are often ignored by children eager for play.

A few precautions for parents to watch are: (1) Watch the way your child walks—if his toes point in or out, or if he is knock-kneed. (2) Make certain your youngsters shoes fit. Buy shoes at a reputable shoe dealer, who is experienced in fitting shoes. Remember, too, that children outgrow their shoes rapidly. (3) If your youngster has foot trouble, it is important that when you buy shoes, that you take both the child and the new shoes to the podiatrist so that he can check the fit. (4) Do not use home remedies on athlete's foot or warts. The disease may not be athletes foot. (5) Encourage your child to do foot exercises to strengthen his feet. (6) Cut your child's toe nails straight across. This prevents ingrown toe nails. (7) Bathe feet daily and dry thoroughly especially between the toes.

Devote just a little time and attention to your youngster's feet and you can help to keep him from hobbling around 10 or 20 years later loaded down with ointments, corn plasters and other such useless paraphernalia.

MARBLES, DO KIDS PLAY ANYMORE?

Washington Reports

By YOUR CONGRESSMAN
JOHN WATTS

In a recent report based on the findings of a Foreign Market Specialist who toured Western Europe to bring up to date the tobacco economic and marketing information obtained by the special tobacco subcommittee of the House Agriculture Committee on its trip to Europe in 1956 —of which, by the way, I served as Chairman—some new conclusions about the past and potential growth of the United States tobacco industry were reached which I thought might be of interest to the many Kentuckians who depend on tobacco for their livlihood or leisure.

In every country where tobacco is grown in reach of the public, our tobaccos are recognized as the finest tasting and most aromatic found or manufactured anywhere. This high esteem has been responsible for the commanding lead American tobaccos have had in foreign markets. Both the esteem and the lead are necessary for keeping this country in an authoritative trading position but several factors work against that end.

First, our foreign customers contend, there is the possibility that we may be pricing ourselves out of the world market, for they say th high cost of U. S. tobacco has .acouraged many of them who normally have a pattern of heavy buying from us to use as much substitute leaf as possible. Cheap substitute tobaccos produced in many countries producers desirous of selling their produce abroad. The new modification of the present schedule will lead to an increase in French and Italian tobacco volume by minimizing the duty on tobaccos among the Common Market nations, while at the same time increasing the import tariff on American tobaccos. There is a strong possibility that the lowering of duty among the Common Market members will lead eventually to the complete disintegration of any duty among them and thus accentuate the differential in cost between our tobaccos and theirs.

The conclusions for the future export of American tobaccos are both favorable and pessimistic; favorable in that it has been shown that our domestic tobacco are still widely respected and desired abroad as well as here at home and still control 33% of the free world exports of unmanufactured tobacco, and pessimistic in that there is a definite need for action which will insure the continued high standard and favorable balance of trade for our tobaccos. This action encompasses maintenance of high quality, availability of an adequate supply, and favorable foreign trade policies. Only with these requirements expedited can the tobacco growers of the United States continue to produce and sell at a profit a tobacco which is universally accepted as the very best.

TODAY'S Meditation

THURSDAY, APRIL 20
Read Isaiah 55: 6-13; Psalm 24
Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully (Psalm 24: 3- 4.)

We soon become like our daily companions. Since our thoughts are our closest companions, the only way to live a clean life is to cultivate purity of mind and heart. As a man "thinketh in his heart so is he." We read in Proverbs, "The thought of foolishness is sin." Isaiah holds out the hope to us that God will forgive the man who forsakes his sinful way and his unrighteous thoughts.

An air conditioner can change the air in a room by drawing out stale air and bringing in fresh, pure air. Thus the atmosphere of the room is changed.

Changing impure thoughts for pure thoughts can alter life. We can fill our minds with the teachings of Christ. Before we know it, our lives will be free from anxiety and worry. We know the peace which comes from inner confidence. We shall have the power that comes to those who are at peace with God, with man, and with themselves.

PRAYER: Our Father, we pray that Thou will cleanse our thoughts of doubts, worries, and fears. Fill our minds with thoughts of Thee, that we may be pure in heart, clean in mind, and Christlike in our living. In Jesus' name. Amen.

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY

Should She Continue One-Way Letters?

THE WEEK'S LETTER: "I read your weekly letters about teenagers all the time. I have a problem that I wish you would help me. Matter of fact, I have more than one problem. It's a long story, but I'll try to shorten it. I am 15 years old and I love a boy very much. I used to go steady with his friend, but I don't any more. I write to him all the time (this boy that I now love) but he doesn't write back. I guess I am just a friend to him. Can you tell me if 15 is too young to be thinking about boys? Do you think I should keep on writing to this boy?

"I have a friend that writes me asking for dates, who is just a friend. I turn him down because of this boy I love. Do you think I should start thinking of other boys? Well, I tried, but they never seem like this boy I love. Here's my problem: I want to see this boy. How can I get him to come over just for a minute or two? I wrote and told him to call me but he didn't. In all the letters I wrote I never told him I loved him. Should I?

OUR REPLY: We truthfully say that fifteen is too young for a girl to "start thinking about boys." All girls do by this age, many of them sooner. We say that fifteen is too young for a girl to really be dead certain that she has found her "one and only" and that there is on one single like him in the whole world.

As to some of the questions:

Sure, keep on writing to this boy, if you like him. Rub—don't go on with the idea that there isn't another one like him anywhere. There are plenty of them, and you'll realize that as you grow older.

If you asked him to call you and he didn't, you made the effort. Don't be too aggressive or you might "scare" him away for good. Continue the "friendship" on the basis of the past and see what happens.

Don't tell him that you love him. He knows that you like him or you would not write to him; you wouldn't be friends. If it's only friendship so far as he is concerned, you would have made a needless assertive approach.

If you have a teenage problem you want to discuss, or an observation to make, address your letter to Teen Talk, WEEKLY NEWSPAPER SERVICE, FRANKFORT, KY.

Will Boys Always Be Boys?

THE WEEK'S LETTER: I am 15 and the boy I am talking about is 17. I like him very much, maybe too much for my own good. We are going steady. He is very popular, and can get anything he wants. He runs around with his friends, friends, which are in their early 20's. I have tried to discourage him from them. He has a lot of other friends, too. He thinks exactly and does exactly what his brother's friends do. He will go out with them, and stay out, until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. I'm not sure what they do in this time. Many kids I know will tell me different things. But I can't really believe them, because I am not sure. They all have different ideas. He is liked by all, but constantly gets into fights with boys he doesn't know. I have one girl friend that is completely against him. My parents like him well but they say they stop him because of this. My friends say to stick with him, and maybe he will change. What should I do?

OUR ANSWER: Maybe he will change, maybe he won't. Can you afford to take the chance? How many years do you think it will take him to change, and how many heartaches are you likely to suffer before that time comes?

Surely, he will change—or suffer himself for it. Boys can go around getting into fights—and get away with it, many times. A fight between teenagers is much more serious than a fight between six-year-olds. Teenagers are big enough and strong enough to inflict serious injury on another person — accidentally perhaps — for such things are seldom really intended. But, it does happen and when it does, it changes from a fight between two boys to a matter of concern for the police and other authorities. The boy who makes a practice of getting into fights at every opportunity is certain to come face to face with a judge sooner or later—and in more serious trouble than he ever anticipated.

Many boys go through a stage where they follow the crowd of older boys, they stay out late, and get into fights with boys from another town, or another school. It is not right, but it happens. Most boys pass through this stage and eventually realize that it is not only wrong, but foolish. Those who fail to come to this realization are the ones who wind up in serious trouble.

If you have a teenage problem you want to discuss, or an observation to make, address your letter to Teen Talk, WEEKLY NEWSPAPER SERVICE, FRANKFORT, KY.

FARM BUREAU in Action

By J. E. Stanford
Kentucky Farm Bureau Fed.

Land Retirement Idea Sound, If—

Nearly all students of the farm surplus situation in wheat and feed grains seem to agree that some kind of land retirement program is needed for solution of the problem. The name makes no difference, whether you call it soil bank, conservation reserve, land retirement, or some other name.

During the Benson administration, the land retirement idea was tried out with only mediocre success. However, it was endorsed by the agricultural platforms of both Democrats and Republicans, and most of the farm organizations supported the idea, including Farm Bureau.

We believe the present administration's proposal to require feed grain growers to shift part of their land to soil conserving crops in order to qualify for price supports is sound. However, the twin proposal to raise price supports in order to get farmers to reduce production is downright silly. Who ever heard of a merchant who had over-stocked $10 shoes marking the price up to $12 in order to move them. He would be the laughing stock of everybody in town. What he would do would be to reduce the shoes to a price that would move them.

The wheat problem is much bigger and far more serious than the problem of feed grains, and the two are very closely related. Yet, when the feed grain proposal was announced with a blast of publicity, not one word was uttered by the administration about what it would like to do about wheat. We feel this was extremely unfortunate because there is not much sense in asking farmers to reduce production of feed grains until they can get some kind of reasonable assurance that the feed market will not be forced to absorb the gigantic wheat surplus.

In other words, unwise use of the wheat surplus could wreck the market for feed grains. Therefore, the feed grain farmers cannot be blamed for kicking up a big fuss because they haven't been given official assurance their feed grain market is not to be ruined or seriously disturbed by the wheat surplus. The wheat problem is the major problem by far, hence should have been tackled first.

We believe the best chance for solving the wheat-feed grain surplus situation is in a land retirement program effective enough to keep substantial acreages of land out of production over a period of several years.
