6 Reasons Why You Should Trade At Home

Trade in your Community

"All I did was mention that there were some real bargains out of town this week. Wow! Did you see the look in that little old lady's eye?"

You need not let your civic spirit carry you as far as our lady friend did but there is one thing you can do. TRADE IN YOUR COMMUNITY. Trading in your own community will not only result in community progress but individual profit as well. The more the community grows, the bigger your paycheck will be.

Profit from trading at home is not confined to money. You will also profit from the feeling of satisfaction found with the realization that the dollars you spend at home are helping your friends and neighbors to prosper.

TRADE AT HOME FOR YOUR OWN SAKE—
AND FOR COMMUNITY PROGRESS.

Trade in your Community

"Well, I don't know what to do. I bought George some ties at on out of town sale today and he's mad as a hornet. He's screaming something about civic spirit and supporting the local merchants."

You might wonder why George is so excited. It's simple. He knows that if the community doesn't grow and prosper neither will he. He also knows that the community can't progress unless its merchants are given the support they deserve.

If you want your car to run, you have to put gas in it. If you want community progress and all the benefits that go with it, you have to support the local merchants.

TRADE AT HOME FOR YOUR OWN SAKE—
AND FOR COMMUNITY PROGRESS.

Trade in your Community

Did it ever occur to you that your local merchant is more than a man who takes your money and wraps the purchase?

He is an individual. He supports community welfare, fraternal and charitable programs. His children go to the local school. You may not belong to the same church, but your pros cross in community affairs. This is your common ground—a genuine interest in community welfare.

Get to know your local merchants better. Visit them more often. They'll appreciate it and you'll discover it's more fun to do business with friends.

Trade at home for your own sake—and community progress.

Trade in your Community

Everyone has heard of the phrase "a fast buck." It takes a deal to promote a fast buck and it's a safe assumption that no one in this community would pay a penny for an option on the Brooklyn bridge.

If merchants serving this community depended on "the fast buck" they would soon be out of business.

Your local merchants offer reliable, efficient service; many establishments are local landmarks because of their reputation for quality, value and service.

Your local merchant knows there aren't enough "fast bucks" in the country to compensate for the loss of one satisfied customer.

Trade at home for your own sake — and community progress.

Trade in your Community

Satisfaction is another word for success.

That's why every sale represents another satisfied customer for our local merchant . . . why he offers prompt, courteous and efficient service . . . fair and reasonable prices . . . cheerful exchanges or adjustments whenever warranted.

Your local merchant is genuinely interested in keeping customers satisfied so they will return again and again.

Patronize our local merchants at every opportunity. You'll soon be convinced that it's the easiest thing to do. When you buy from people who are anxious to please—your promise of satisfaction never ends with a sale.

Trade at home for your own sake—and community progress.

Trade in your Community

"You wouldn't have to sneak money out of my pocket if you would shop in the right places!"

The "right places" our sleepy objective is talking about are the stores and shops in his own community. Unlike the thief in our story, he realizes the importance of trading with local merchants.

Trading at home is important to everyone. The benefits go not only to the merchants involved but to you, the individual buyer and the community as a whole. In return for dollars spent locally, the individual feels the security which comes only from dealing with somebody he knows. The reliability and friendly service of local merchants can't be bought anywhere else, at any price.

TRADE AT HOME FOR YOUR OWN SAKE—
AND FOR COMMUNITY PROGRESS.
