

Household workers not credited under social security, story says

"Most workers and self-employed persons having wages credited to their social security accounts regularly," Fred South, Public Representative of the social security office said in a statement today. This statement does not apply to some people, namely the household workers who are not receiving credit under the social security program for their work. There are some cases on file in the Lexington social security office where it is necessary to contact as many as four different employers for information concerning domestic employees. These cases come from a situation where a benefit claim was filed and the record of wages did not show credit for domestic employee.
