HARDWOOD AND HARDHEADS

by Charlie Vettiner, Dean Kentucky's Basketball Officials

Basketball has become more than just a sport. In many places it it now a way of life. It is of prime importance to the community because it involves the boys who play, the men who coach, the spectators who cheer, and the officials who penalize.

During the first three consecutive weekends of March, Kentucky's high school teams face district, regional, and state tournaments. This column would not be worth writing if winning these championships were all important and sportsmanship practices in games held no significance in the molding of character in our players and student bodies.

A kid who doesn't play to win and who doesn't "bleed inwardly" when he loses just isn't a worthy descendant of Daniel Boone and Abraham Lincoln, but Kentucky needs young people who learn valuable lessons for later life from defeats. Kentucky can do without the kid who allows defeat to turn him into a hardhead.

These are the "Ides of March" and it behooves players, coaches, spectators, and officials to beware lest they menace the game of basketball by being hardheads of the hardwood.

During the "Ides" all players must realize that they are the heroes of countless youngsters and the examples they set will reflect many other young lives. In one tournament I recall two opposing captains who refused to shake hands prior to the opening tip-off—a couple of hardheads. In another I recall a fine competitor who attained a degree of immortality as he "stopped" a menacing crowd of supporters with these words: "The kids on this team are ashamed of you."

If a coach sends his boys into the tournaments with the philosophy that there is no guilt in breaking rules, only in being detected, he qualifies as a hardhead. If his conduct at the players' bench reflects discredit on himself, his school, and community he qualifies a grain. Coach Knute Rockne of Notre Dame taught a grand lesson more than thirty years ago when he said "I could beat the rules, but I won't because my teaching respect of the law is important in the development of our young men as is my own personal example."

Spectators would not knowingly menace the sport they love by unsportsmanlike conduct—yet, they are often the hardheads. Booing has never contributed anything of value to basketball. It often causes ill will and dangerous uncontrolled emotions. I once watched several hundred spectators convert themselves into several hundred hardheads as they charged onto the floor to "get" the officials. In the mad rush a little three year old girl was trampled and crippled. Spectators ought to remember her during the "Ides of March."

Officials, who are poorly-trained, constitute the final category of hardheads. Good sports require good officiating. Attitude largely determines an official's efficiency. The poorest spectacle of an official is one who abuses his authority and deludes himself by thinking that the fans have paid to watch him officiate rather than see the boys play. It is entirely unnecessary for him to preach a sermon to a player or coach who has violated a rule. He has no authority to publicly embarrass anybody. After all, they do not commit the unpardonable sin by making an error. When violations occur, all that is required of an official is that he enforce the penalty in a firm, pleasant manner. During the "Ides of March" it will be proven again that the best officials are the most inconspicuous ones.

In school boy sports, Kentucky has long been regarded by many as "The Sportsman-ship Capitol of the Nation." The conduct of players, coaches, spectators, and officials in the March tournaments will again determine if this recognition is merited.

THE REPUTATION OF YOUR COMMUNITY IS WHAT YOU MAKE IT.

I read the Mercury and often come upon notes from old files of the Mercury's column of years gone by of people we once knew. I also enjoy the column by Miss Nellie Crump who writes with so much human feeling. I don't know where Morgan street is in Carlisle of which she writes so often but some how I imagine it could be a theme for many interesting and human articles. I have some of her sketches in my scrapbook.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Vice spent Sunday with Will Brierly and daughter Evelyn of Nicholas County.

Mike Hamilton of Louisville, spent the weekend with his father, Charles Hamilton and Mrs. Hamilton.

New 4-H camp will not replace Camp Bingham

LEXINGTON, KY.—Some reports, in connection with the drive for a new 4-H camp in Extension District IV, in northcentral Kentucky, have given the impression that Camp Bingham in Washington county is to be discontinued. This impression, says George Corder, chairman of 4-H Club Programs at the University of Kentucky, is entirely false. Camp Bingham will continue to operate at full capacity each year.

Need for a new camp in Extension District IV arises, Corder says, from the fact that Camp Bingham, which has been serving this district as well as District III, cannot take care of all the boys and girls who want to attend camp. Only about 1400 boys and girls from District IV have been able to attend camp each year in the past, Corder points out. This is only about two-thirds of the number who have asked to go, and if facilities had been available still larger numbers would have wanted to go.

Benefits to the boys and girls from experiences at 4-H camp, Corder said, go far beyond mere recreation. A week's experience in camp, living with many other boys and girls under supervision of able camp leaders, develops qualities of good citizenship and leadership in the boys and girls. It also adds to their knowledge of certain crafts and skills, for each day is filled with organized activities.

Camp Bingham, at the former Tatum Springs in Washington county, was donated to the Extension Service for 4-H Club use by Barry Bingham, Jr., of Louisville, some 20 years ago, as a memorial to his father, Barry Bingham. Each year about 2,400 boys and girls attend camp there.

SPRUCING UP FOR SPRING takes in a lot of territory. Cleaning, painting, repair work around the house—just about all of us get the urge to perk up the place this time of year. I've noticed that usually the lady of the house will also want to redecorate—new color schemes, curtains, slipcovers, etc. If you ladies are making such changes in your home, I'd like to remind you that now would be the perfect time to install handy extensions—and what could be prettier than a Princess? You can match or harmonize with your new color scheme because Princess extensions come in many beautiful colors. Why not stop by your business office and pick a Princess phone in the color of your choice?

CHUCKLE, ANYONE? Thought you'd get a kick out of this little story I ran across the other day. A little boy called the operator every few minutes and asked the same question, "Please, Operator, what time is it?" Something about the boy's voice told the operator this was no childish prank. Finally she asked him to call his mother to the phone. "She can't come," he said. "My little sister swallowed a button this morning and my mother had to take her to the hospital. And she told me not to dare leave the house till twenty after eight. I looked and looked and honest, Operator, I don't see any twenty on that clock. And I'm afraid I'll miss my school bus." Happy ending is that the operator called the little boy at 8:20 and he met his bus.
