Today's Thought From The Past

"He that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator." Francis Bacon.

this week at MOREHEAD STATE COLLEGE

By Ray Hornback
Public Relations Director

Morehead, Ky., May 11—The Morehead State College post office has been flooded with mail from well-wishers who have expressed their hopes that President Adron Doran will soon be back on the job.

It has been just over three weeks since the popular Morehead president underwent a major chest operation which resulted from an automobile accident in 1959. In that accident, Mrs. Doran was seriously injured, receiving a broken pelvis, broken collarbone and broken ribs.

At the time, Dr. Doran was unaware that he had been injured but x-rays later showed that he received a rib injury. A harmless, fatty-tissue growth formed on the inner side of his rib cage and doctors felt that the growth should be removed.

The operation was one hundred per cent successful, although the recuperating period will be a long one. Dr. Doran is still experiencing a great deal of pain as the severed muscles slowly heal.

He hopes to return to his office in the very near future and has asked that the many people who have written, wired and called be thanked for their heartfelt interest.

Washington Reports

BY YOUR CONGRESSMAN JOHN WATTS

So much has happened in the last week both on Capitol Hill and in corners of the world and nation far removed from it that even a thorough reading of the newspaper in the morning and attention to a re-cap of the news on the evening radio and TV broadcast can't hope to cover it all in detail. I thought, therefore, that this might be a good way to highlight some of the week's events and give you a glance at Congressional reaction to them.

At the top of the news as this is being written is the Administration's program, which seems to have been set on a more even keel last week with the passage of the minimum wage bill. The bill was adopted by the House and Senate after a Conference Report attempted to iron out some of the differences between House and Senate measures. It was a close and hotly-contested fight, but the adoption of the measure with modifications of what the Administration had sought finally sent the bill to the White House for presidential signature.

Also last week in Washington the flags which proclaim the arrival of a visiting dignitary flew on the route from the airport to the White House. The visit of his Excellency, the President of Tunisia, Habib Bourguiba, was the first state visit of the new Administration, and was replete with all the motorcades, conferences, dinners, and glittering ceremonies that mark the meeting of two heads of state. President Bourguiba is a long-time, loyal friend of the United States, a distinguished statesman who fought for many years for Tunisian independence. Tunisia, an Arab nation which nonetheless has remained aloof from Nasser's United Arab Republic, is now chiefly concerned with raising the standard of living, educating the people, and bringing them the benefits of industrialization.

While the nation waited for the weather to clear up at Canaveral long enough to send a Mercury Redstone Rocket 116 miles up, carrying astronaut Alan Shepard, the spaceman himself, from all reports, waited calmly for the ride that would make him a space pioneer for the U. S. By the time this column appears, perhaps, the fate of the rocket ride will have been determined. Meanwhile, conversation in Washington is spiced with references to the great difference in methods of Russia and the U. S. in publicizing the space efforts. Rather than await the outcome of the trip and then release news stories shrouded in secrecy and spotted with controverting facts, the U. S. chose to make known the plan for the shot and announce the identity of the passenger in advance as well as arrange for full press, radio and TV coverage. A marked derailment from the Russian track, perhaps, but not so very strange when one considers that the American attitude toward space exploration is one of scientific research rather than East-West propaganda.

A final note on last week's news is again political, respecting the Gettysburg conference of Republican leadership, presided over by General Eisenhower and attended by "Ev and Charlie", the House and Senate GOP leaders who have been all over the nation via the TV news conference they star in on Thursday mornings. While there was general agreement on backing up President Kennedy in his foreign efforts, the President-turned-private-citizen refused a political advantage to snipe at the Kennedy domestic program, much to the chagrin of some Republican leaders who thought it a heaven-sent opportunity to make propaganda capital. It was a heartening gesture on the part of the General, who was never an especially partisan President, anyway, and one in which the whole country can take pride.

SECONDS FOR SURVIVAL—I've often mentioned the Bell System's role in our nation's defense. Well, a mighty interesting new sound-and-color film, "Seconds for Survival," is available for showings.
