Fire With Fire

Some Kentucky weekly newspapers are playing second fiddle to daily publications for no reason at all. They're being disregarded by their friends and neighbors when a story breaks for publication. Instead of the weekly receiving first consideration, the larger press is given initial rights.

This has caused great concern in several country shops since their management feels, and rightly so, they should be entitled to a break whenever possible. The majority of instances circumvent society items such as wedding announcements, engagement pictures and stories of parties-to-be. Rather than consider the hometown paper, individuals place their articles in the daily first, then the weekly. Since it's difficult enough to sew up a late story, weeklies argue with justification that the practical answer to this type treatment is one of discernment. If the story appears in a daily before being offered to the hometown press, then when it finally does reach the country office the picture or story is promptly dumped in file 13.

This appears to be a pretty sound countermeasure—The Cynthiana Democrat

Will it go on Page One?

Contrary to popular thought, the strength of a newspaper is not directly proportional to page one. Neither is the relative merit of a story.

Each page bears a certain amount of responsibility to the entire publication, thus giving a balanced spread of news, features, photos, ads and editorials. The cry "Oh how wonderful it would be if every page could be the front page," is ridiculous indeed. Since advertising is seldom considered a page one segment there would be no newspaper.

It isn't unusual for good front page stories to be placed elsewhere. A newspaper's inner structure is strengthened. The same holds true for pictures. A common fault in weekly newspapering—it isn't as prominent in the daily field—rests with 99 per cen concentration on page one. All else as abandoned. It just isn't fair to the reader. Though located far from page one, sports is certainly an important subject. Society sections demand tremendous readership. Editorial pages are sought by the intelligent reader. Feature material and columns are sprinkled throughout the entire publication. And we repeat, so are good front page news stories.

News items are competitive. Every item vies with another for certain positioning When considering a story for page one these factors are all measured:

Is the story timely?
How many readers will it interest?
Is it routine?
Do pictures go with it?
Is a follow-up expected for next week or the very near future?
Can it hold its own against last minute news stories?
Has there been previous reference to its content?

These and other questions must be answered before any story is given a justified placement. Then there's the matter of human nature. What one might consider a fine article, another thinks it's of little value. Hence, another pressing the strength the point that good front page stories serve a useful purpose when set elsewhere.

Purchasers of an automobile don't just survey the outside. They want to know what's under the hood, what's inside the doors. We feel what's beyond page one means much in determining the quality of any newspaper.

HAPPY LITTLE JUNE BRIDE

100 YEARS AGO

Confederates Defeated In First Land Battle

BY LON K. SAVAGE

Jefferson Davis arrived at Richmond 100 years ago this week to install the Confederate government in its new capital. But even as he rode through cheering crowds in Richmond, Yankee soldiers were pushing their way across the mountains of western Virginia to inflict his army with its first defeat.

It was the morning of May 29 when President Davis' train arrived, and the reception, someone said, was a welcome for a second George Washington.

A 15-gun salute was fired. A delegation of notables met the train (General Lee, however, was in northern Virginia, preparing for a feared invasion from Washington). Thousands cheered and waved handkerchiefs as Davis rode through town in a four-horse carriage.

Davis was escorted to his quarters at the Spottswood Hotel, where he made a short speech. Then, after visiting his quarters, he went to the city's fairgrounds for demonstrations of enthusiasm from the soldiers encamped there.

Retreat From Grafton

But while the Confederate troops at Richmond cheered, others were pulling back from the little town of Grafton in what is now West Virginia. Their commander, Colonel George A. Porterfield, was being threatened by advancing federal troops from Wheeling and Parkersburg.

The Union troops had been ordered forward by General George B. McClellan to occupy the important Baltimore & Ohio railroad in western Virginia and attack Porterfield if they deem ed it advisable.

Porterfield, with about 500 untrained, mostly unarmed men, retreated to Philippi, about 15 miles south from Grafton, and the federals commanded by Colonel Benjamin F. Kelley, arrived at Grafton on May 30. Kelley immediately made plans to follow and capture Porterfield.

On the night of June 2, thirty-nine federal companies moved out in two groups, one to bombard Philippi from a hill; the other to divide into two sections to occupy the town and cut off retreat. Everything was timed to begin at 4 A.M., June 3, with a pistol shot as the signal.

Heavy Rain

But things went wrong. A rain started and grew heavy during the night. The companies under Kelley became mired in mud and were late arriving; two women tipped Porterfield of the attack and a third, Mrs. Thomas Humphreys, who lived on the hill where the bombardment was to take place, actually opened fire on the federals.

Mrs. Humphrey's firing, which the federals took to be the signal shot, started the battle; cannon started firing, and the Confederates began streaming from the town southward in retreat. Colonel Kelley, following the retreat, fired at one Confederate who turned and shot Kelley in the chest.

Kelley, who survived to fight on through the war, apparently was the only Union casualty. Records show two wounded college boys were the only Confederate casualties (both were hit in the leg, and they are claimed to be the first two shot in the war to lose limbs by amputation). Porterfield made good his escape, and that was the "Battle of Philippi," which made headlines throughout the North as a great federal victory.

Despite the battle had important effects it heartened and inspired the people of the Union: it held the B & O in Union hands west of the Alleghenies and it started McClellan's climb to power.

Next week: Confederate victory at Bib Bathel.

FARM BUREAU in Action

Credit—Secret Farm Weapon

Is credit the secret weapon for a farmer to use to build his farm into a more profitable enterprise

Many Kentucky bankers have seen the farm credit light shining brightly over the countryside. Production Credit Associations have been organized to fill certain needs. Other cooperative credit sources are being formed in certain areas, and other private credit sources want a hunk of the farmers' credit business.

The Farmers Home Administration has provided unequaled valuable service to countless farmers in tight money areas where lenders are overly cautious. It has been valuable to indigent farmers who could not build up a credit rating that would please their local banker.

The administration's coverall farm bill includes an attempt to broaden credit services to farmers through the Farmers Home Administration. It carries over from past FHA acts these ideas Loans must be made to persons with a farm background who are unable to obtain sufficient credit elsewhere. The borrowers must become owner-operators of family farms.

The bill provides that no loan shall be made that will exceed the normal value of the farm The loans must not exceed the amount of money which a county committee of three persons certifies for each individual loan.

Loans can be made on insured for buying farms, operating farms, developing land and water uses, and in emergency situations.

Certain broad limitations are placed on the amount of money that can be loaned. For example, non-profit associations can borrow up to $2,500,000. Individuals may borrow up to $50,000 for operating loans, such as purchasing livestock, feed, etc., if that amount is certified by his county committee.

If most people can agree that credit is the persuader of growth and that credit can minimize the farmer's reliance on price support programs, maybe they can also agree on this question How liberal should credit be?

No Nare Hands and Knees Floor Scrubbing

Miss Eloise Lorch, University of Illinois, says there is no more hands and knees floor scrubbing. An electric floor washer, resembling an upright vacuum cleaner is now available to help do the job.

The washer is made of soft plastic and weighs less than the vacuum cleaner. There is a special compartment which holds the water and detergent This compartment can be removed from the machine for easy filling. Firm brushes do the scrubbing while you guide the washer over the floor. This machine can be used on tile or other hard surface flooring.

This washer works in much the same way as a vacuum cleaner. Dirty water and suds are vacuumed into a plastic bag eliminating mop wringing This bag can be emptied without your hands fourching the water You can also control the amount of scrubbing and water used on the floor

This new floor washer will help homemakers who have many floors to care for and limited time It will especially benefit the homemaker whose health makes this task almost impossible

Last Call For Sudan Grass

Sudan can be sown as late as July 1 but usually does poorly if sown after mid-June Piper is the recommended variety On very rich or well fertilized sod and with enough moisture we can begin grazing in four to six weeks Sudan gives a surprising amount of pasture especially in hot dry weather and is one of the best supplementary pastures we can sow

Chemical Brush Killers

One of the biggest farm problems in Kentucky is the fence rows and the ditch banks clean as it looks like the weeds, briars and bushes are just determined to grow on ditch banks and in fence rows A great deal of progress has been made in recent years in controlling these pesky plants with chemicals

Our own experiment station recommends Ammate or a combination of 2, 4 D and 2, 4, 5-T for these jobs Ammate is a pelletted material called Fenuron which may be broadcast by hand We are now in the season when this work may best be done

When the plants are growing rapidly we may put on a foliage spray, which means that we try to cover all of the stems and leaves of the plant We wait until the leaves come out enough and are nearly full grown so there will be leaf surface to absorb the spray This material goes into the leaves and down to the roots and kills the plant

We must be very careful that the spray is allowed to drift onto any other desirable plants that we don't want to kill of our own crops or our neighbors We must follow very carefully the directions that are written on the container

Egg Grades

When you buy eggs at the grocery, you'll notice the shield shaped "U.S. Grade" mark on most of the egg cartons For wise buying, you should know what this means to you. Eggs that are sold under the U.S. Grade shield have been graded carefully by certain standards of quality set up by the U. S. Department of Agriculture The grader puts each egg to a rigid test. Color of shell is not considered. this has no effect on egg quality or nutritive value. Using these standards, the grader decides whether the egg is good enough to be graded and, if so, in which grade —AA, A, B or C—the egg belongs.

Eggs graded "AA" or "A" are of highest quality and are noted for their attractive appearance and delicate flavor. Grade B and Grade C eggs are of lower quality but are just as nutritious as eggs of the higher grades. Grade B and C eggs can be used in cooking, where appearance and fine flavor are not so important

An "AA" egg must have a clear, firm white and a well centered yolk that is free of defects. To receive the "A" grade, an egg must pass almost the same test, although the requirements are not quite so rigid The white of a "B" egg must be clear, but may be slightly weak The yolk may be off-center and slightly flattened and it may have definite but not serious defects. Requirements that an egg must meet for the "C" grade are slightly lower than those for Grade B.

Remember that the main difference between the two higher grades is in the appearance of the egg, not in the quality. Eggs that are of high quality and have a well centered yolk and clear white are the best for poaching or frying. Cheddar cheese aged 6 months or less is classed as mild, 6 to 9 months as mild-sharp, and 10 months or more as sharp.

Remove rough and sticky places from your iron by sprinkling a little salt on a piece of paper or cloth and running the hot iron over it.

In just one year, accidents of all types kill about 11,700 rural residents and injure about a million. Nearly half the deaths are caused by traffic mishaps.

About The Boy Who Drinks Too Much

THE WEEK'S LETTER: "I am 16 and 8 months. I was going steady with this boy that I love very much. I broke up with him because he drank too much. After five months of not going steady with him I find that I still love him and I want to go back to him. But my problem is that he still drinks and my mother won't let me go out with him. Every time he gets drunk, the next day he tells me he will never do it again but he still does. What shall I do with him? And take into consideration that I love him very much."

OUR REPLY: If you can, make him prove that he loves you—by giving up his drinking habits. If he loves you enough, he will do it. If you go back to him under present circumstances, you are, in effect, saying that it is all right with you if he continues to drink and promises you the next day that he will never do it again.

Your mother is quite right. If he does not stop his drinking now, certainly he will not stop it should you get married.

For some young men, drinking too much is nothing more than a "stage" in life, and they "outgrow" it. One morning they wake up to reality and realize the uselessness of it. Others, unfortunately never outgrow it. They go through life starting one headache after another and bringing heartaches to those who love them . . . as well as to themselves.

In summary, we are not being kind to those we love when we tolerate or excuse a bad habit or a wrong doing. And, we cannot close our eyes to something that we do not like and pretend it is not there. It is always there, and the longer we ignore it, the more difficult it grows.

And, no matter how we try, we can never change another person, or mold them into an image of our own choosing—unless they want to change themselves. We can only help them want to make the change—and they'll see no reason for doing so as long as we excuse their faults and believe them when they say "never again."

Dost Thou Remember?

When this is read by some of our friends others will be livin' it up at the circus that is scheduled to be here Wednesday. A circus coming has always been one of childhood's happiest dreams and it is no trouble at all to get a few jobs done around the home for the ticket fund. Besides the matter of admission, there must be ballons, popcorn, ice cream cones and cotton candy. I can remember when peanuts and pink lemonade made up the menu. Then came the ice cream cone!

Do you remember your first cone? Ah! that was a way back when everybody was carefree and happy. It was at a circus (Sun Bros.) showing on what is now known as the City School athletic field that I got a glimpse (and taste) of my first cone. Gee, it was the hottest day! Under the tent was like an oven. The cones were only a nickel so everyone with that much left bought at least one when two boys came through shouting to all within hearing that the little funnel-like containers were filled with ice cream. Right there is where the "catch" was, with one person as ignorant as another.

Now that we all had a handful of cold ice cream, there were no spoons! You see no one knew the cone was to be eaten along with the cream. Women daintily pinched back the edge of the cone with fingers or teeth for the small fry and themselves while men delved into the pants pocket for the dependable old penknife with which they goug ed out the cream—and threw the cone under the seat.

Despite all the licking that was done, just about everyone was plastered with the gooey stuff. It wasn't long after this until some of the really smart ones discovered that the cone was not paper at all and was meant to be eaten—not licked. As far as I know this was the initial appearance of the ice cream cone in Carlisle. Before that summer was over everyone was eating them, cone and all, and have been going strong every since.

Yaps—all . . .
