out of the basement, which keeps the rest of the house dryer, too. These materials are available at builders' supply companies and may be bought by the yard or roll, also notes. A basement is often the scene of mildew damage. Mechanical dehumidifiers, sometimes called "basement dryers," are useful where a lot of moisture collects and causes damage.

They transmitters, attached to the bears by a plastic collar, will broadcast a continuous signal over a radius of five miles or more. Directional transmitters will keep the bear's location pinpointed despite rough terrain. The transmitters were developed by a radio corporation in Palo Alto, California.

Without transmitters, scientists would find it virtually impossible to keep tabs on them. But the radio signals will keep broadcasting even while the bears are hibernating.

Frank and John Craighead of the Montana Cooperative Wildlife Research Unit, leaders of the study, have already developed a long-range study aimed at preventing their extinction.
