VEXTATIONS ON A VACATION

children, as long as she lived. The Conley's were among the very first people we met because my father rented a small cottage on Drexel's avenue from "Uncle John," where the John Clark's now own and live. The Conley's owned a lot of cottages and never asked more than six dollars a month for any of them because the laborer never made over one dollar a day in those times.

Old Landmark Still Away
A bit of Carlisle slipped away last Wednesday when the Dotson Restaurant on Broadway closed its doors. Known as the Conley Hotel as far back as most of us can remember, it was owned and operated by the late Mr. and Mrs. John R. Conley, she being known far and wide as "Mother Conley."

from their own country. John Bradbury was only one of the many English visitors who cautioned his fellow citizens on the people west of the Alleghenies, however, his words were similar to others who followed his path in the West. He found the people friendly, and he never met with the least incivility or affront, while visiting in Kentucky. Furthermore, he believed that Englishmen would enjoy traveling in Kentucky more if they understood that the state was a frontier where everyone who worked for a living was respected.

Samuel R. Brown was another visitor who did not like what he had read about the people in the West. After a trip through the mountains of Kentucky which lasted for four months in 1816, he lambasted a popular impression of the Kentucky backwoodsman.

those in Indiana. The comparison was very flattering to the women of Kentucky. He not only thought Kentucky women more handsome but their conservation was that of educated persons. The menfolk in Kentucky showed their wealth in the dress, manners, and education of their womenfolk. Flint believed that the presence of slaves in Kentucky fostered the elegant manners of the white women, who were relieved of household and the care of the children by house servants, and who spent their time in making themselves attractive to men. He was sure that the young native Kentuckians were in general, the most handsome and that the circumstances under which they developed into maturity gave them friendly dispositions. Fordham, coming to Lexington after a visit to Indiana, was quick to compare the Kentucky women with
