CAWOOD CALLS—No area likes basketball more. Overflow crowds are pouring in all over Kentucky by this season to watch the cagers in action, and Western and Eastern are building magnificent new buildings to accommodate their basketball fans. The NCAA finals will be held in Louisville again this March for the fourth time in the last six years because of its tremendous ticket sales. It's always a sellout before the ticket windows open to the public.

In Lexington this weekend is the first of numerous tournaments in the Commonwealth goes stage center. It's the tenth University of Kentucky Invitational Tournament with Kent, Kentucky, Iowa, Oregon and West Virginia making up the field.

When UK's beautiful four million dollar Memorial Coliseum was completed in 19-50, Coach Adolph Rupp suggested a holiday tournament that would entice the public to come to an outdoor campus instead of the traditional gymnasiums. The veteran coach advocated that the four teams split the financial harvest, after expenses. These plans were initiated by the University's Athletic Department two years later, and the UK Invitational has grown to an unequalled stature among like holiday basketball classics. It is almost annually the richest of these events.

Painted each of the quarter of teams eighty-two hundred dollars that first year. It reaches five figures now.

The record payoff was in 1959 when each team took home $15,000 for playing two games. Naturally, good teams are easy to get with those big purses, and Athletic Director Bernie Shively and Coach Rupp have been able to line up top talent for the UKIT.

Kentucky has won five of the previous nine tournaments, while West Virginia a team in again this weekend, has won the meet twice in three tries. A strong Oregon State team that will have football's Henry Baker joining the team for the UK Invitational, and tall Iowa will complete the field. Kentucky is the defending champion, but the Cats will have to be right to win it again this time.

Harvested First Time Eden Shale Xmas Trees
LEXINGTON, Ky. — Christmas came early this year at the Eden Shale Experiment Station farm in Owen County. K. Ag. Experiment Station forester has harvested the first batch of Christmas trees last week from their experimental plantings and said them:

O. M. Davenport, forester, and Bernard Jones, U.S. Forest Service, Scotch pine—were taken off. Not the least important part of the program was to require 80, and need for sale by their organization. The Eden Shale trees are beautifully shaped and have a high density amount of foliage present.

Generally the trees range from 6 to 8 1/2 feet in height—the desirable height for most modern homes.

Davenport said about 60 percent of the cut graded choice, and better. The remainder graded standard.

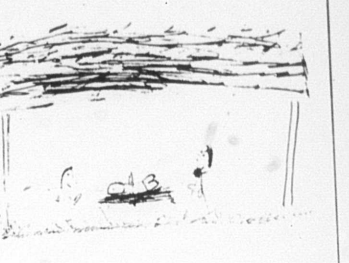

The project was started in 1956 to determine suitability of Eden Shale soil for Christmas tree production. Davenport said it was thought land in the area could be utilized for such extra farm income. One good example is land under absentee ownership, or part-time farming.

Christmas trees require less continuous farm work than other crops and yet produce a good income per acre.

Next year's harvestings should be higher in quantity. About 40,000 seedling have been planted since 1956 at the farm; each year several thousand were put out.

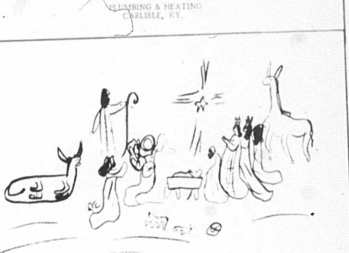

Davenport attributed the excellent quality to good
