In Kentucky

Kentucky on a coach in 1854 and his letter about the trip is a vivid picture of stage travel in Kentucky. He was on his way to Nashville and was forced to take a coach at Louisville because the Ohio was so low that boats could not travel with safety. The conditions of the rivers had forced a heavy burden of traffic on the stage lines, and Lexington could not sustain a stage line in Kentucky. The introduction of the Concord and Tappan coaches in 1830 changed the scene. These coaches were used only on the more important routes from the East and to landing places on the Ohio River. Stage travel was a rough and tumble business. The stagecoach was a noisy and uncomfortable mode of transport. The stagecoach was a noisy and uncomfortable mode of transport.
