OBSERVATIONS OF TRAVELERS

In Kentucky

1750 - 1850

By Sam E. Allen

Chapter IV (Cont.) Accommodations For Travelers Steamboats

The travel accommodations on the rivers were better than the overland routes for two reasons: it was easier to travel by boat downstream, and most of the early settlements in the West were located at the mouths of the small rivers flowing into the Ohio. While it was true that traffic was heavy on the Ohio and some of the Kentucky rivers prior to the advent of the steamboat in the West in 1877, it was also true that most of the boats which brought visitors to Kentucky were flatboats or smaller craft with very limited speed. The McAfee brothers came down the Ohio in batteaux in 1773 with Captain Thomas Bullitt, the pioneer surveyer. The party carried only surveying instruments, guns, knives, and food essentials such as salt, sweetening, and meal. The autobiography of John Rowan vividly tells of the journey of William Rowan and family coming down the Ohio River and up the Green River by flatboat with all of their worldly possessions. This type of travel with some convenience was not uncommon for settlers, but few visitors made the trip to Kentucky in such fashion. Both of the Michaxs and other early visitors came to Kentucky in boats which would not carry more than two or three persons with enough provisions to keep them from starving between known settlements.

The coming of the broad-horns, keelboats, and flatboats was early, and many of the visitors who came to Kentucky around the beginning of the nineteenth century traveled on these conveyances. Cuming, Ashe, and Buttrick came to Kentucky on flatboats, and only Ashe made any adverse comments on accommodations. The first steamboat on the Ohio was built and owned by Fulton. It arrived at Louisville without advance notice in October, 1811, and created a sensation. The boat had come from Pittsburgh in seventy hours, and the appearance at Louisville of such a marvel created an interest in the boat traveling throughout the West. Within the next decade steamboats were built in many Kentucky towns on the Ohio, and travel by steam on inland rivers of the West became a vogue. Steamboats appeared on the Kentucky River as early as 1816, but until the system of improvements by locks and dams was completed in 1842 the lower fourth were responsible. The age of the steamboat on Kentucky rivers prior to the Civil War was a period of good travel conditions, and the great number of excursions going to Mammoth Cave from Louisville each summer proved that travel by steamboat was best for everyone.

EMPLOYEES AWARDED SAFETY CERTIFICATES

Thirteen employees of the Fleming Mason RECC were awarded special Safety Certificates at a regular meeting of the Cooperative's directors at Fleminsburg. These employees have a record of at least 15 years of service to the co-op without an accident which sets an enviable record.

Awards were presented by C. Rowe, manager of the following: Mrs. Hilda Faulkner, receptionist; Mrs. Bernice Porter, bookkeeper; Paul Flora, line foreman; Tolit Rouse, line foreman; Tevis Perry, line foreman; R. K. Hart, office manager; Jack Dowell, groundman; Verlie Earlywine, lineman 1 c; Sol Estill, field worker; Marcus Fleming, lineman 1 c; Russell Maddox, mechanic; Tom Ridgon, engineer and James Mulroney, janitor.

Mr. Ross commended each employee for their devotion to duty and safety and presented each with a special certificate and a monetary award.

Does Two Year Difference Make Girl Too Old?

THE WEEK'S LETTER: I have a problem and would like your opinion. Here it is: I like this boy who is 14, very much in school, and so he was put up a few grades. He is a Junior this year. I am a Sophomore, and am 16. We like each other very much and I'm afraid he will ask me to go steady with him before long. I would like to, but I'm afraid my parents will disagree with me, because I am the oldest. Do you think I'm too old for him? Please answer. Tell me what you think of us going steady.

OUR REPLY: At ages 16 and 14, we do not recommend that you go steady—and our opinion would not change with the passing of the years. Two both have too much to lose. If you have a regular problem you would like to discuss, write to this column in care of this paper. Please do not ask for personal reply. Address letters to THE WEEK'S LETTER, Box 1, Carlisle, Ky. Names will be withheld upon request.
