rural and secondary roads.

The twelfth district, with offices at Pikeville servicing seven counties, reported estimated damages of $1,300,000.

"All districts will report damage approaching or exceeding that amount," Ward said.

The next few weeks are critical ones for highways. The thawing subsoil under the routes tends to make the surface very unstable and subject to damage from below as well as from above by heavy vehicles.

Weight load limits have already been reduced on hundreds of routes throughout the state in order to lessen the damage. Also no overweight permits will be issued until March 18, Ward said.

Severity of the winter is indicated in the cost of ice and snow control to the Department. Almost $500,000 worth of salt alone has been bought or contracted for. More calcium chloride, which is used in ice-snow control as well as for stabilization purposes, has been bought than in previous years.

Cost of salt, calcium-chloride and labor and equipment for clearing the roads this winter has already exceeded a million dollars.

Additional periods of ice and snow will increase this figure, as will any spring flood damage.

"With this year's winter damage alone about five

Hollar Urges Local Farmers to Practice Conservation

Lovell Hollar, Chairman of the Nicholas County Soil Conservation District Board of Supervisors, joins H. S. Vice, County Committee Chairman of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, in encouraging farmers to carry out needed conservation practices.

Under the cost-sharing provisions of the Agricultural Conservation Program, farmers may get financial assistance in conservation work.

One of the most needed and widely used practice concerns the establishment of permanent grass-legume seedings for soil protection. Cost-sharing includes the land clearing, liming, fertilizing and seeding. The vegetative cover may be used for hay or pasture. The use of lime to permit growing legumes and grasses is a soil improvement and protection is a frequently used practice, and it results in better stands of grasses and clovers. The establishment of a stand of trees may be eligible for cost-sharing. The control of competitive shrubs has been a popular practice and result in improved pasture.

Springs provide one of the best sources of water known. Many have been developed and supply water to tanks for livestock use. The construction of ponds for livestock water is a much needed practice, and many farmers have built ponds under the program. Adequate water in each pasture permits better rotations and grass land management. Pipelines from permanent water storage facilities may carry water to water tank for livestock. Waterway construction has long been eligible for cost-sharing, and it is believed more farmers should use this opportunity to provide a place for water to run.

The establishment of permanent vegetation to stabilize dams, gullies and field borders is sometimes eligible for cost-sharing. Diversion channels and terraces are mechanical structures used to slow up or divert run-off water. Almost every farm is in need of water control. Stream channel clearance, enlargement or realignment, is needed, and occasionally this work can qualify for cost-sharing. Tile drainage, participated in by more and more farmers to dispose of excess underground water and to dry up wet bottoms or to intercept wet weather veins, has many advantages. Land shaping to help drainage is eligible for cost-sharing sometimes. Subsoiling is growing in popularity and farmers are reporting favorable results.

Cover crops should always be seeded on land following row crop harvest.

There are other practices that may qualify for cost-sharing. Generally, the cost-share rate is 50 per cent. For details of the program, farmers are encouraged to visit the ASCS or SCS offices.

Feed Grain Signup Ends Friday

Although the time is getting short, there is still an opportunity for those feed grain producers of Nicholas County to take part in the 1963 feed grain program. March 22 is the date which concludes the signup period.

According to Alma Atkinson, manager of the Nicholas County Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Services office, producers who have not yet signed this contract should know these principal features of the 1963 program: (1) The program is voluntary; (2) it applies to corn, grain sorghum, and barley—for these crops, the base acreages are added together into one "feed grain base" for the farm; (3) a payment may be earned for diverting acreage from these feed grains to a conservation use: (4) a substantial price-support payment is also being made available to those farmers who participate in the 1963 feed grain program; and (5) only participants will be eligible for price-support loans and purchase agreements on their '63 corn, grain sorghum, and barley crops.

Miss Atkinson invited farmers of the county to come into the office for any needed details.

Conservation Caravan at Headquarters Today

The Kentucky Department of Conservation's new mobile exhibit, The Conservation Caravan, will be in Nicholas County on March 20 and 21.

It will be at Nicholas County High School on Wednesday, March 20 and at Headquarters School on Thursday, March 21.

It will be open from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. The public is cordially invited to view this unusual animated exhibit.

The Caravan, which is built in a special trailer, shows a vivid and realistic scene of both good and bad conservation practices. One diorama depicts the terrific damage done when it rains on a typical Kentucky watershed area where conservation practices are not used.

On another diorama the same watershed area is shown, but because the water run-off is controlled by proper woodland management, flood control structures, contour cultivation, strip cropping, channel improvements and other practices, clean, clear water flows down the hillsides and the streams, and soil erosion and flood damage are brought to a halt.

It is all a part of the Conservation Department's expanded educational program to show city dwellers, school children and farmers correct conservation practices.

According to Commissioner of Conservation, J. O. Matlick, considerable effort and expense has been put into the building of the exhibit to make it the most outstanding in the United States. Says Matlick, "Conservation is everybody's business, but if we expect the general public to support legislation and programs designed to conserve and develop our State's natural resources, we must carry on an education campaign. We must explain the various programs, problems and opportunities and how each individual citizen can assist in efforts to maintain and develop our natural resources for the benefit of this and future generations of Kentuckians."

State winners may compete in the International Land Judging Contest at Oklahoma City on May 1 and 2.

W. F. Threlkeld of the Soil Conservation Service will arrange for technical training to be given by Soil Conservation Service Soil Scientist, Jack Taylor.
