

Don't Take A Cut In Your Old Age Checks

Edward T. "Ned" Breathitt today warned that Nicholas countians who receive old age assistance stand to lose an average of $11.33 a month if A. B. Chandler is elected governor.

Breathitt is opposing Chandler in the Democratic primary, said that he plans to raise the average monthly payment in the county by about $16, if he is elected.

Breathitt said that the last month Chandler was governor, December 1950, average Old Age Assistance in the county was $43.74 and that today it is $57.10, a gain of $13.36.

His opponent proposes to torpedo the revenue structure that is paying this increase," Breathitt said. "He plans to reduce the money it brings in by about one-third."

"If the State is forced to cut its share of pension money by one-third, we would also lose the two thirds of the money paid by the Federal Government on a matching basis and payments would go back to the 1950 level," he said.

There would be similar reductions in Aid to the Blind, Aid to the Disabled, and Aid to Dependent Children, Breathitt said.

"I feel a deep obligation to citizens of Kentucky who, through no fault of their own, need help in their later years or because of a disability," Breathitt said. "It would be no less than an act of cruelty to deprive them of part of the meager funds they now get. Yet that will be the consequence if my opponent has his way."

WHY TELSTAR II? You may wonder why the Bell System wants to launch a second experimental communications satellite when the first one performed so well. The answer is that the extremely fast-growing demand for overseas communications imposes a sense of urgency on the development of satellites. Our success as a business depends on facilities being ever-ready to meet public needs. We need to learn as much as we can, as soon as we can, about the technology of space communications. Especially, we want to know more about protecting satellites from radiation damage. Telstar II will have a "command" system designed around transistors that will be more resistant to radiation than those of Telstar I. Also, it will be launched into a higher orbit where it will be exposed to less radiation. As with Telstar I, the Bell System is paying the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for all launching costs including the rocket.

PROUD OF THEIR CATCH—Richard Willoughby and Billy Herrington hold up their fish netted Saturday morning at Milltown, the largest one held by Willoughby weighed 40 pounds.

The bald eagle mates for life and returns annually to its huge nest. A nest in Ohio was used for 35 years, weighed two tons. One house-ground eagle scavenged light bulbs, spark plugs, candles, sheets, magazines, and a family photograph in a heavy frame.

Farm Facts
FARM CREDIT NEEDS: It's generally agreed that an understanding of credit as a production farm tool is just as important in today's farming operations as is a knowledge of machinery, fertilizers or insecticides. Only a few farmers—those fortunate enough to inherit, or marry, considerable wealth—are able to farm efficiently without the use of borrowed money. The ownership of farm land in itself is not sufficient to supply capital needs. Land represents only a small fraction of the required assets. Livestock, buildings, fencing, basic lime and fertilizer treatment and equipment will often amount to much more than the investment in land. That's where the need for credit comes in.

Farmers vary greatly in their skill to handle livestock, crops and machinery. Where either the farmer succeeds or another fails. The same differences exist in their skills to handle money and credit. During the winter a good machinery man will spend a considerable time field to look after the right thing at the right time. This also is the mark of a good borrower—the ability to handle his debts promptly and efficiently.

It is often disheartening to see how careless some farmers can be with their possessions. For example, have you ever noticed what a bad impression you get of a farmer when you see expensive machinery left out to rust and corrode; minor repairs on home farmstead? Then imagine the impression of the lender who is staking that kind of farmer with hard-earned cash.

There is an old rule that a person's credit rating is based upon three C's—Character, Capacity and Collateral. Maybe in these days, we should add two other C's—Care and Cooperation—care in protecting life and property, and cooperation of the wife and family in developing and in maintaining a good credit rating.

ATTENTION! FAMILIES with 4-H CHILDREN

STARTING YOUNG—Rachel Booth, gets instruction from Governor Bert T. Combs on how to start a ribbon. Miss Booth is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Booth, Stone Creek, Ky. Looking in at left is County Attorney Charles M. Cox and at right is John Peltam, 4-H committee man.

Governor Bert T. Combs, who officially dedicated the new 4-H Camp in Nicholas County on Monday, May 20 stated to the people as follows: "It is the type of cooperation given by you people of Nicholas County and the twenty-six other counties in District 4 of the 4-H work in making this camp possible that insures a better place for our country in the future when it is so essential that our young people be given every possible advantage to meet the challenge of the coming space age."

Yes, Nicholas County can be justifiably proud that its citizens worked diligently to procure this camp in Nicholas County and with the cooperation of Governor Combs and other state leaders the camp is becoming a reality.

Is this the type of program that we want to continue? We believe every family who has children in 4-H will answer this question YES when they go to the polls next Tuesday, May 28, and vote for Ned Breathitt, who has stated that he favors this type of program for the State of Kentucky.
