Breathitt, hitting on the theme of progress, said his Republican opponent, Louis B. Nunn would "stagnate and stagnation" to Kentucky.

In Southeastern Kentucky—the Republican stronghold—Breathitt got help from a prominent Harlan Republican, joining him on the platform was Ernest Smith who urged the election of Breathitt because he has a program, a plan for our state's future.

Smith, a member of a statewide Republican committee for Breathitt said Nunn's campaign had offered nothing but "deceit, slander and hate."

At Harlan, Breathitt called education "the key to the campaign." Education, more than any single activity of government, holds the key to your future," he said.

The 85-year-old Hopkinsville attorney repeated his pledges to stand by his party for location in Kentucky, to build the Central Kentucky Turnpike and to build more rural roads by doubling the rural highway fund.

"We shall work you, night and day, to help you erasing plants and in expanding those already here," he said.

Saturday, at a East-Eastern Kentucky gubernatorial candidate said "Kentucky's future will mean a lot of good feeling, an end of factionalism, an end of cooperation, an end of achievement, in road-building, in parks—belongs to all of us."

Breathitt, calling him "a great, honest, progressive leader."

"He is your neighbor, but he belongs to all of us, and his record of achievement, in road-building, in parks—belongs to all of us."
