Nunn Turns Down Star Witness Role

It seems that Louie B. Nunn, Republican candidate for governor, has shown unusually good judgement in turning down an invitation to tell a grand jury at Prestonsburg what he knows about bootlegging operations in Floyd County, the home of Governor Bert combs.

The GOP nominee has been telling campaign audiences since July that bootlegging was extensive in Floyd County. He has charged that illicit liquor operations in the county were being ignored by the Combs administration, although news stories of raids and arrests by state police and alcoholic beverage agents apparently inspired Nunn to grasp upon the county's prohibit on difficulties as a campaign issue against his Democratic opposition.

Candidate Nunn did not take up his attack on Floyd County's liquor problems until three weeks after state agencies had lent their aid to an anti-bootlegging campaign which Floyd citizens had been triggering for some time. Nunn did not enter the picture, either, until the Floyd County Times had run several news stories and editorials about the citizens' concern and the raids and arrests by state agents under the Combs administration.

Nevertheless, it must have appeared to Floyd County Attorney Barkley J. Sturgill that Candidate Nunn had some acquaintance with the facts about alleged bootlegging operations in the governor's home county, and so the GOP nominee was asked to appear before a grand jury that was convened at Prestonsburg recently. Nunn could have been a star witness in the jury's probing of Floyd's illicit liquor trade.

But the GOP nominee turned down his big chance. He did so, according to the county attorney, because "the only information he had was what he had heard from others and would be considered hearsay." Hearsay evidence, it should be noted, ordinarily is not admissible in courts of law because if its incompetence. Evidence is incompetent when it comes from a witness who is not qualified to offer it. All evidence given in court must be competent and relevant.

Thus it is understandable why Mr. Nunn did not see fit to appear before the Floyd County grand jury. He undoubtedly thought he would have been an incompetent witness. All this possibly has some relevancy to his candidacy for the governorship, however.

News of the Week.

Mrs. Stella Watkins of East Main street visited her daughter, Mrs. Tebay (Lois) Rose, and family in Harrodsburg for several days.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Bobb of Covington were guests of her sister, Miss Hallye Griffin, several days. Due to Mr. Bobb's illness, this was their first visit home since last April.

Mrs. Lela Baugus of Mt. Sterling has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Nina Baugus, of Morgan street. They are also sisters-in-law, having married brothers.

Mrs. Mae H. Mooreland accompanied Nellie Crump to Paris again last Thursday to see an eye physician.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Baker, Johnnie Dearing and Miss Rebecca Snapp of Winchester were here Sunday afternoon to see Nellie Crump.

The Lexington Herald recently said, "Put two nickels together and they make a dime with which you can buy about a nickel's worth of something."

The little pet dog belonging to Mrs. Ben Duncan passed away unexpectedly several days ago.

Christmas in September.

The recent cool nights have also added extra zing to one of our old neighbors in a real Christmas spirit way. When Mr. and Mrs. Cray Marshall went up in Bath county to see Prof C. B. Cassidy last Friday he filled the car with a variety of garden fresh vegetables for his Morgan street friends of a year or more ago. There were cucumbers, squash, corn, oodles of tomatoes and other good things from the farm.

A few years ago, Mr. Cassidy bought the old Morgan property on Morgan street and moved to it. Especially fond of children, he was our friend and neighbor until his undying love for the farm lured him back to Bath county, near Moore's Ferry.

A veteran and hero of World War I, Professor Cassidy has also been a school teacher, preacher and Sunday School teacher, studied law, speaks several languages and has read hundreds of books before becoming the farm that he is today.

His many Carlisle friends and old neighbors wish for him continued success as a farmer, the life he enjoys to his heart's content, although the summer's toil and sweat have slowed him down a bit, he confesses to his closest friends.

Just Plumb Spooky.

Last week when Mae H. Moreland accompanied me to Paris (we have been twice) she also acted as a guide through various stores that I had never visited before. One of these places had a front door, the likes o'which are unbelievable, but it is the truth, so help me! I have seen pictures of robots and such, but never expected to see what I saw happen.

This is a store where all kinds of groceries are sold. There are two sets of big double doors, one pair at one end of the store-length plate glass front, and another pair at the other end. When one nears a door to go in or out, the dog done thing opens automatically, then closes after you pass through. The queer part about it all, there isn't a thing in sight that causes it to do like that. I study about it, even dream about it.

As far as I am able to figure, the only explanation that seems possible for such shenanigans is the rug one has to step on to get in and out of the store. It is a spooky business either way a stranger is headed.

Dear Sir:

The parents, students, and fellow teachers deeply regret the resignation of Mrs. Eva Mae Henson, a devoted and dedicated elementary teacher at Nicholas County Grade School.

A strict believer in a good basic education, "Mrs. Eva Mae" was held in high esteem at Ellisville as well as at Nicholas County Grade School, by parents and students alike.

A very cooperative, thoughtful teacher combining the best of the old-fashioned methods with the best modern terms of teaching.

Mrs. Eva Mae's students were her children. Each one tried to please her and gain a place of honor in her heart—a very fertile ground for learning.

Mrs. Eva Mae's resignation will be a great loss to the Nicholas County School system. We are sorely in need of teachers and administrators of her caliber in our county and state.

Sincerely,
Vernon Craig

Guides for Washing, Drying, and Pressing "Easy-Care" Garments

Wash before garments become very soiled. Wash them as soon as possible after becoming soiled. Pretreat grease spots with a grease solvent before wetting or pressing. Heat may set these spots.

Pretreat heavily soiled areas with the same detergent or soap as you will use for laundering. Wet the heavily soiled area, apply detergent, and rub gently. A soft brush may be used on sturdy fabrics such as men's shirt collars.

Wash in water of approximately 100-140 degrees with amount of detergent recommended on the container. When washing by hand rinse thoroughly. Do not overload washer or dryer.

Wringing, twisting, excessive heat (in water temperature or in drying) may set wrinkles.

Easy-care garments are satisfactorily dried in a dryer on a low or medium setting.

Remove from dryer when slightly damp. Press if needed while still damp. Check temperature of iron on an inconspicuous area of garment. Even lowest setting on some irons is too high for some of the man-made fibers. A steam iron may be used on many easy-care fabrics.

Take Care of Your Clothes

Save yourself time and money and add to the life of your clothes by:

Placing garments on clothes hangers as soon as they are taken off.

Brushing and checking for spots and needed repairs after each wearing.

Removing spots and stains promptly.

Making repairs promptly.

Airing after each wearing.

Storing uncrowded.

Wearing clothes for the use intended.

If you follow the instructions on the label when you clean a garment and the results are unsatisfactory:

1. Take the garment back to the store where you purchased it. Explain to the merchant what has happened. Doing this will be helpful to you, to all consumers, and to the merchant. A good merchant would much rather have you register a legitimate complaint than lose you as a customer.

2. Write a letter to the manufacturer. Give the facts. A reliable manufacturer welcomes information on unsatisfactory performance. This gives him a chance to correct it. The manufacturer must satisfy the consumer if he is to stay in business, for it is largely by consumer demand that we are able to purchase what we want.

Reading labels, keeping yourself informed of new developments, and following carefully instructions on the label will result in:

Clothes that look better.

Garments that last longer.

A saving in money and time for you.

Tax Reduction Under Way

Washington Report by John C. Watts

On Tuesday, September 24, at high noon, the House of Representatives began consideration of the first major tax reduction bill in a decade.

The 25 members of the Ways and Means Committee devoted many months to drafting this measure which will reduce tax rates on individual income, corporate income and capital gains from top to bottom. The bill, if enacted in its present form when fully effective in 1965 would reduce income taxes by $11.06 billion annually.

Originally, I had considerable reservations about the tax bill. It looked like a piece of foolishness to me, to cut taxes when the Federal Government was already spending more money than it was taking in. After listening to many months of testimony by eminently qualified people - top businessmen, insurance brokers, bankers and economists, however, I became thoroughly convinced that our tax structure was archaic. Further, I was convinced by all the evidence presented that this archaic tax structure was standing in the way of industrial expansion; that it was the reason our growth factor was not keeping pace with some of our competitors in the world; that the tremendous tax bite took the incentive out of further expansion; it dampened the fervor of people to invest; and was a roadblock to manufacturers expanding and producing more goods at less cost, thereby being more competitive abroad, and was thusly adversely affecting our balance of payments.

While I wanted the bill to be accompanied by sharp reductions in government expenditures, which I hope may result, in accordance with one section of the bill calling for such action, the President's statement and further evidence that Congress has already shown to economize, makes me confident that whether or not we have these reductions, the tax cut would so stimulate the economy, business growth and employment, that more revenue would flow to the Government after the tax cut than is now coming in. And in the long run, we would come near achieving a balanced budget than if no action were taken.

The tax cut should bring us closer to a balanced budget, because tax revenue, even at lower rates, in a few years will be greater than that which would have resulted from the old rates at previous levels of economic growth. The Joint Economic Committee of Congress has estimated that a $10 billion tax cut could, when it is spent and respent throughout the economy, increase our total national output of goods and services by $30 to $40 billion over what it would otherwise be - an increase which would create between two and three million new jobs.

State and local governments will benefit, too, from the increased economic activity. In the post-war years, state and local taxes have been increasing at an average rate of 7 percent per year. The Treasury has estimated that a $10 billion tax cut, when fully in effect, would add about $1.5 billion a year to state revenues and $1.4 billion to local revenues, thus providing the state and local governments the much needed funds without necessitating new taxes.

All in all, I am hopeful Congress will approve this bill we on the Ways and Means Committee have labored on for so long and which I truly believe will benefit all the people and advance the economic progress of our nation.
