The Falmouth Dam

Nicholas Countians who who live near the Licking River, or its tributaries, are experiencing anxious days and wakeful nights, as they face the threat of being routed from their homes by the proposed Falmouth Reservoir.

The Licking Valley Association, organized to Preserve the valley, advocates flood-walls for those towns built too near the water. If down-river residents are honest in their claims that all they seek is flood-protection then the dam would not be necessary. Floodwalls would be the most economical, least destructive and quickest answer.

We hear that many thoughtful folks in that area are opposed to the dam. They don't like the idea of going to sleep below that 110 mile by 650-foot wall of water.

If the recreation phase is the major purpose of the dam, we shall go on with the clamor for it.

Everyone can help by writing letters and by joining the county unit of Licking Valley Protective Association.

Control Stored-Grain Insects

Insects that attack stored grain can be a big problem. Control of these pests is a must for the farmer. Here's how to do it:

1. Clean all storage areas of grain left over from the previous crops. That's because this old grain may harbor large numbers of insects that will be glad to attack your newest crop, too.

2. After bins, etc. are swept clean, use premium grade 57 percent strength emulsifiable concentrate Malathion. Use one gallon of this concentrate in 25 gallons of water. Spray all surfaces to the runoff point; being sure to force spray into cracks and crevices.

3. Make sure the bin area and adjacent areas stay clean, to keep insects from getting into the new crop.

Farmers Get 37 Cents Of Nation's Food Dollar

During the first quarter of 1964, U.S. Farmers received an average of 37 cents of the dollar consumers spent for food in retail stores.

That's the same as a year earlier and a cent more than in the last quarter of 1963. This gain was due mainly to increases in prices of fresh vegetables and oranges.

Fertilizer Use Is Up In U. S.

A report released recently shows that U.S. farmers used nearly 29 million tons of fertilizer during the year ending June 30, 1963. That's about two and one-half million more tons than the year before and almost three and one-half million tons more than two years ago.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, it still averages only about 60 pounds per acre of crop and and pasture land.

In 1960 and 1961, the U.S. rate of fertilization was about one-seventh that used in West Germany; however, it was four times that used in the Soviet Union and 20 times that used in India.

Comin' Round the Mountain

Mr. and Mrs. Cray Marshall and family and all they had left of a homemade jam cake got home about 12 o'clock Saturday night from several days' motor trip to Lookout Mountain and other points of interest. Having spent Friday night and part of Saturday at Gatlinburg, Tenn., they left at 4 p.m. in a wonderful downpour of rain which lasted the remainder of the day. Henry, their youngest, came over as soon as he got up Sunday morning with a little glass of "genuine mountain dew" guaranteed to "tickle the innards" printed right on the soft drink bottle he brought along as proof. Tasted something like lemonade with a generous amount of red pepper added, not that I ever sampled the likes o'which before. It is considered very fine down South "like Coca Cola," Henry hastened to add. So I drank it! No ill effects as of now at 2:30 p.m. He also brought me a big postcard from Rock City, atop Lookout Mountain near Chattanooga, Tenn., and told me of the wonderful experiences he enjoyed there. Said he had more left as he slipped one hand into a pocket and it came out clutching one lone dime and a nickel. Yessir, Henry saw just about everything —and had money left.

One Firm Run Ads

Plugging Competitors

A furniture store in Ambler, Penn., frequently runs advertising which is designed to promote all local retail firms—even competitors.

Such advertising is done on the belief that general activity in a trade center is good for all retailers as well as the community as a whole.

It has been proven that the large store which advertises heavily automatically helps to support nearby specialty shops and services. Thus, the best location for a small gift shop may be in the shadow of a large department store.

Studies made of retail trade decline in cities where strikes closed newspapers indicate that specialty shops which did little or no advertising suffered almost as much as the nearby big advertisers.

It was evident that the downtown traffic created by regular newspaper advertisers helped to keep the entire trade center alive.

The most dangerous competition for the local merchant is not his next door neighbor. The biggest threat is the competitor in a distant trade center.

Or, in many cases, when advertising is not used, trade for all local retailers is lost because customers are not stimulated to buy anywhere.

How Long Would You Eat In An Emergency

The U.S. Department of Agriculture surveyed over 11,000 households to find how long food supplies would last in case of an emergency. One third said they could stretch food on hand a week or less. Another third between one and two weeks; and the rest felt they could hold out longer than two weeks.

Location in an area was a big factor—in two weeks or less, 70 percent of downtown big-city households would run through their food supplies, compared to 59 percent in the suburbs, and only 39 per cent on farms. Other factors included locations in the nation, family income, education, and size of the family.

AUGUST-1964

Kentucky's Income Problems. All Kentuckians should be concerned about the direction that the state's farm income will take during the years ahead. The $650,000,000, more or less, annual cash receipts for farm commodities generates about a $3,000,000 business economy and that's a lot of money in anybody's state. About 40 per cent of Kentucky's cash farm income comes from tobacco and that crop is now threatened by the health scare which may seriously reduce that source of income.

The big advantage of tobacco to Kentucky's farmers is its high per acre income. With average yields running well over 2,000 pounds per acre and the price near 60 cents per pound, gross income averages about $1,300. Labor income is near half that amount. The problem facing farmers is to find an alternate income for tobacco if something drastic should happen to that crop. Alternate high income crops are few and consist mainly of fruits and vegetables in which Kentucky farmers have shown little interest during the past fifty years. Extensive grain crops such as corn, soybeans and small grain offer little opportunity for increased acreages because of the hilly nature of our farms and the small percentage of plow land. Even if suitable land could be found for additional acres of these crops, it would probably require forty acres of them to give the same net returns as one acre of tobacco.

Livestock production is usually cited for the best supplement for tobacco and with this I agree because we have some 10,000,000 acres of pasture land in the state, a large part of which is being poorly managed and poorly utilized. We should realize, however that grazing types of livestock give low net acre returns. Feeder calf production, for instance, would require between 40 and 60 acres to equal the returns from one acre of tobacco. High per acre income can usually be had from dairy, hogs—both feeder pigs and fat hogs, poultry and fat cattle.

Why Not More Fruit and Vegetables? Kentucky farmers have not kept pace with national trends in production of fruits and vegetables. The state's farm income from these crops dropped from about $4,000,000 in the mid 40's to just over $2,000,000 now, and our share of the national cash receipts from these crops dropped from 4% to slightly over 1% in that period. The story is almost the same for vegetables. We are losing ground fast in that field. Few counties are producing even a small fraction of the fresh fruits and vegetables required for their own use.

Trimble is a noticeable exception and, as one drives through that county between May and October, he is impressed with the roadside markets and productive orchards and truck farms. Millard Maxey, Trimble County Extension Agent, says that over 100 farmers are producing peaches, apples and strawberries for market and most of it is sold through 12 attractive roadside stands. About 200 farmers produce 650 acres of tomatoes for early marketing and processing. Roadside markets offer a profitable outlet for other farm produce such as eggs, potatoes, jellies and the like. Because these local markets are not greatly affected by national suppliers, we wonder why more farms in every part of the state do not consider this type of production and marketing to supplement their regular farm income.
