KEEP PICNIC FOOD COLD

LEXINGTON—It's time for picnics and cookouts! Your family probably will want to take a picnic lunch to one of the nearby state parks—or just eat out in the back yard—often this summer, for even the simplest foods seem to taste better when served outdoors.

Don't let food poisoning ruin your fun, warns Elizabeth Helton, UK Extension specialist in foods and nutrition Summer temperatures cause food to spoil easily unless it is kept cold, so handle picnic food with care.

Keep food at 40 degrees or below—the temperature of a good household refrigerator—from the time it is prepared until it is eaten or until it is cooked and served hot. Many types of insulated food containers are available that will keep food for hours if it is well-chilled when placed in the container.

Sandwich fillings, meats, salads, eggs, pies, cream-filled or custard-filled cakes, and other soft desserts are among the foods that should be kept cold until serving-time, Miss Helton says, Be especially careful with dishes that contain mayonnaise or other salad dressings or sauces.

Hot dishes—such as any meats, or poultry pies, meat loaf, soups, stews, and casseroles—also need special care. If these are prepared ahead of time, refrigerate them as soon as they are cooked and keep them cold until you re-heat them just before serving. Otherwise, they may become lukewarm and spoil.

If possible, make sandwiches and combine foods and dressings or sauces just before serving, and be sure to keep the ingredients cold until then. Such food is safer—and tastes fresher—than that prepared at home. Use raw fruits and vegetables and cook meat on the picnic spot if you can.

Wildlife Arrest Record Is Set

Frankfort, (Special)—The highest number of arrests for any one month in the history of the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources was made during May and the second highest number of licenses was checked during that same month by the 119 conservation officers in the Division of Law Enforcement, Minor Clark, Commissioner of the Department, reported today.

During the 31-day period the officers cited 650 persons for fish and game law violations and of that number 518 were convicted by the courts of Kentucky for a conviction percentage of about 80. Commissioner Clark pointed out. A total of 128 cases were lost and six cases are pending, according to the records of the Law Enforcement Division. During that same period the officers checked 37,391 license holders on the lakes, ponds and streams and in the fields, the report shows.

In pointing to the record Commissioner Clark referred to the mark set last year by conservation officers, which also was a new high. During 1963 almost 4,000 were arrested in the fields by the 115 officers while checking 176,135 licenses.

A rundown by Wildlife Districts shows: (arrests first and convictions second)

First District—84 and 73; Second—82 and 59; Third—13 and 11; Fourth—72 and 59; Fifth—100 and 95; Sixth—97 and 80; Seventh—55 and 55; Eighth—55 and 39 and Ninth—92 and 47.

The greatest number of checks were made in the First District, with 7,231, followed by the Fifth, with 5,142, and the Ninth, with 5,066.

Sandwich fillings, meats, salads, eggs, pies, cream-filled or custard-filled cakes, and other soft desserts are among the foods that should be kept cold until serving-time, Miss Helton says, Be especially careful with dishes that contain mayonnaise or other salad dressings or sauces.

Hot dishes—such as any meats, or poultry pies, meat loaf, soups, stews, and casseroles—also need special care. Dr. Eslie Asbury Notes Opening Day Race Profits Pledged To Medical Fund

Florence, — Help for those who help the sick is the goal set for opening day at Latonia Race Course on September 4 when the newly reorganized and refurbished racing center ushers in its 1964 thoroughbred season in a charitable fashion.

All profits of opening day above operating costs go directly to charity—the Alumnal Fund of the University of Cincinnati's College of Medicine, it was diclosed today. Moreover, the donation will not be earmarked for any particular use and left to the judgment of Dr. Clifford G. Grulee, Jr., dean of the College of Medicine.

Announcement of the unique program—a significant 'first' in Midwest racing—was made by Frank E. Tours, executive vice president of the Kentucky Jockey Club, Inc., which owns and operates Latonia and Dr. Eslie Asbury, prominent Cincinnati surgeon and a member of the Kentucky Jockey Club Board of Directors.

Dr. Asbury, noted Kentucky thoroughbred breeder and owner of Forest Retreat Farms at Carlisle and Paris, will also serve as chairman of the opening day charity operation. The project was a result of his suggestion to fellow jocky club directors who endorsed the proposal fully.

"Speaking on behalf of the Kentucky Jockey Club, I am more than happy that we were able to pioneer such a significant and worthwhile medical education program which will have benefits for everyone in the Greater Cincinnati area. We hope to be able to build upon the program so it will develop into a major medical care and education project during the ensuing years," he explained.

Dr. Asbury said a large turnout of fans on opening day at Latonia Race Course would assure a very generous charity sum to be turned over to the Alumnal Fund. He said such a fund is of prime importance in the operation of a medical college. He called upon physicians in the area to give the project their full support.

Something of a Mystery?

Allen Stone holds a mortar or rocket found Friday in Fleming Creek where he and two other youths, David Hughes and Eddie Hardwick were swimming. The device was well-made and we think, not homemade. Each section of it was well machined and carefully threaded. Stone stated that one of the boys struck the head of the rocket on a rock several times, before he unscrewed the head and removed the charge which they burned. In addition to the charge he said the chamber was filled with bits of metal, but how the rocket got in Fleming Creek, whether it was tossed or fell, remains a mystery. --Mercury photo
