The six inch steel pipe, with a hooded inlet and two concrete anti-seep collars, will permit the gradual release of flood water. A vegetated emergency spillway at the end of the dam will be used during periods of excessive rainfall - rainfall intensity known as a 10 year frequency. The hooded inlet is an anti-swirl device that causes the pipe to run full, without it, the pipe would seldom fill and the water would swirl like water draining from a bathtub or sink. The lake will be fenced and a pipeline will take water to two livestock watertanks located in nearby field. This project was done in cooperation with the Soil Conservation Service and the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. The earth and rock moving was done by Clifton Waugh's equipment.
