Christmas Shoppers Trade At Home And Save

Seventy per cent of the shoppers who perennially leave some gifts to buy Christmas needs in distant metropolitan centers gain nothing in strategy or savings. A recent estimate, made from a study of marketers in cities under 25,000, is considered conservative by some retailers. The merchant may justly wonder why local citizens buy their Christmas gifts. ... The shopper, then, often falls his local retailer only because the retailer first falls to provide an adequate service through advertising.

Nothing does more to breed suspicion than ignorance. That is true of relationships between nations. And it is true, as well, of the attitudes of diverse groups within a country. Knowledge produces understanding and that is the reason for the 40th annual observance of National Farm-City Week which is to begin this year on the 26th of November and end on the 26th, Thanksgiving Day. It will conclude, before, of a week long series of events aimed at bringing about better understanding between the urban and rural segments of our society.

The observance will be primarily local in character. But it is national effort directed by the National Farm-City Committee made up of representatives of more than 150 businesses, industries, professions, trade, church, youth and service groups, educational institutions, government agencies, publishers and broadcasters. Kinwals International again will be coordinating agency. And it's president means anything. The week is destined to be a small-scale success--last year, for instance, it was observed in U. S. and Canadian communities, and practically everywhere else. French speaking North America read it, heard about it, or saw pictures concerning it. What will go on during the week? The list of events is long and impressive. Businessmen will tour farms, and farmers will tour factories and cities. Banquets and luncheons will be given in honor of farmers, agriculturists, officials, and rural youth. Joint meetings will be held between farm and city people, and viewed as different from their own.
