

ROAD BLOCKS TO BE USED TO CATCH LICENSELESS DRIVERS

Frankfort—The State's official muscles flexed again in October and grew a little stronger as State Safety Commissioner Glenn Lovren announced that State Police will begin using road blocks to catch drivers whose licenses have been suspended or revoked.

Speaking to more than 750 delegates at the Governor's Safety Conference in Louisville, Lovren called for jail sentences to be given persons found guilty of driving while their operator's permits are suspended or revoked.

Commenting on the highway death toll in Kentucky, which is currently running well above last year's record figure, Governor Edward T. Breathitt said, "This is an appalling waste of life. Even more appalling has been the failure of many of our public officials and many of our citizens to do something about it."

proper safety management of the highway system and to reduce traffic accidents.

State Police Director Colonel James E. Bassett said it would cost Kentucky $4 million to meet the National Safety Council's recommendation to add 374 men to the current State police force of 449.

"We added 365 miles of dual lane highways to our system last year, but not one extra State trooper," Bassett said.
