Scouting Stays Modern

Education of the young is always one generation out of date because teachers educate by the standards of their own generation and not by those of the next.

This critical comment - whether true or not - does not apply to the Boy Scouts of America and its training program for boys from 8 to 18.

The Scouting program is an educational experience for boys that supplements the training of the home, the church, and the school.

Through constant studies and surveys, the Boy Scouts of America keeps up to date in providing badge and advancement requirements that have been hailed by troop leaders throughout the nation as being "more challenging", "more specific", and "better understood by boys".

Parents, let your sons join a Scout Troop or a Cub Pack, and help keep the Scouting program modern. --Contributed.

Sloppy Looks Too Often Implies Poverty Of Mind and Initiative

(The Lexington Leader) It is true that you cannot accurately judge a book by its cover, but the cover of a book makes a distinctive first impression that sometimes is hard to overcome.

People are a lot like books; their words, ideas and emotions are often hidden behind a deceptive cover. The teenage boy with eyebrow length hair or the girl or woman who goes to town with curlers, and shorts or slacks instead of a skirt presents a picture which is akin to the cover on many paperback books.

Such people are not being casual; They are being lazy and sloppy. People who see them will think that these members of the sloppy set care very little about others and even less about themselves.

Where do these women think they're going? What special event are they planning to attend that requires them to appear in public looking like a walking beauty parlor or a bathroom?

And how about the hairy young males that we're seeing along with the dirty sneaker set of college students who seem to feel that being properly dressed means blue jeans and a dirty se and a dirty sweat shirt. Do any of them really think an employer would hire them?

Of course all of these people have the right to express their own type of individualism, but why does anybody want this kind of individualism?

Do the people who wear the book cover of degenerates and who appear to have difficulty finding suitable clothing think the world will ever think of them as a type honestly trying to meet the challenges of our time? The poverty of such dress often refelcts no more than a poverty of the mind, spirit and initiative.

In "All's Well That Ends Well," Shakespeare wrote,"The soul of this man is his clothes." We wonder how many people in our town are like Shakespeare's man. How many people want to have their souls judged by their manner of dress?

One nice thing about a new edition of a book: Publishers have an opportunity to change the cover.

Are you satisfied with your cover?

From the Diary of a Country Editor

by Warren R. Fisher Sr.

Thoughts while journeying: Maysville at high noon; thriving little city, giving herself airs with Eastern Standard time. Across the fine new bridge and up through Southern Ohio; and good fields of white burley here and there. Through Russellville, where I seem to remember that poor Harley Selp, who used to conduct annual bargain sales for Kirkland's in Carlisle, once lived, but now sleeps the long, long sleep. On to Circleville over twisting roads and onto the national highway through Zanesville, which brings to mind the old road markers on the Blue Licks pike, and zooming along prairie-like stretches through seemingly endless rows of corn, till we come in the shank of the evening to Cambridge and sizzling hot steaks, with French fried potatoes and sliced tomatoes, and good coffee for the oldsters; and my young daughter in high glee and a fit of giggling at having overturned a glass of iced water into her parent's lap. And though she is shushed in the subdued voices that folk--or some folk--use in restaurants, I am somehow glad that she is not tortured by that foolish timidity with which I have been beset all of my life, a timidity that more than often makes me drew back into my shell and seem unfriendly, when I am not, and has caused folk in my home town to say--as a good friend told me the other day--that I am "a sour-looking fellow," and others that I am "a trifle upstage". As my mood seems to have drifted into the confessional, let me say that I was born with that God-forsaken expression, and I have some old tintypes to prove it; but if I thought for a moment that I had developed any tightness of hatband, after nearly twenty-three more of less futile years as a country newspaper editor, I should seek out the nearest bridge of sizeable height and do a nose dive. For of all tiresome and absurd people, give me the man, who after a few petty honors or offices or a bit of wealth, begins to regard himself as indispensable and develops a strut. But I've left my steak and potatoes to grow cold.

* * * *

So, refreshed, on into the gathering dusk to Steubenville and relatives from Kentucky, to receive us with open arms and incidentally save us an hotel bill. And I am amazed at the streets thronged with colored folk. Never have I seen as many in one town, save in Mississippi, but on this trip, we were brought in to work in the mills. Away down the street comes the faint rythm of a dance band and far into the night their happy mellow voices rise in laughter and shouts to each other as they pass to their homes and another day of work in the sweltering mills. Surely here is a race--take them where you may--who have accepted the teaching: "Sufficient unto the day is the evil therof."... Much pleasant chat with our kin, and after a fine breakfast and as sweet a cantelope as I have had this season, we are away into a strip of West Virginia and soon into Penn's Woods. And what a sizeable woodland the canny of William bargained for--rivers and forests and fertile valleys, and rich ore and black diamonds under the rugged hills. Presently to Pittsburgh, which awes me a trifle, yet we follow the road markers easily, until misdirected by a lad, who thinking we said Philp's Observatory rather than Conservatory, sent us back-tracking some ten miles, until we sought information from a most pleasant young woman, who awaited a street car. She rode back into town with us , showing a short cut. She had visited Kentucky she said, and had patted Man o' war on the nose. Horses, horses, horses! nearly everywhere we stopped and someone noted the license on our car. "Yes, sah, Kentucky Derby," said a Pittsburgh traffic officer, as he waved us on at a signal light... We didn't see the Phipp's Conservatory, but we rushed shamelessly through the excellent Carnegie Museum, for there were many miles to go and it was long past noon. I could have spent a full day with the wonderful bird exhibits.

Men's Wear Stores Prefer Newspaper Ads

Newspapers are the advertising media most preferred by men's wear stores, according to a survey conducted by Men's Retailers of America.

The survey was conducted over 62 stores, and 59 of them reported that newspaper placement accounted for from 35 per cent to 95 per cent of their advertising budget.

All stores reporting indicated that they were giving serious consideration to increasing their newspaper lineage because of the results they achieved.

The fact that a sales group accounting for such a large portion of the overall market as men's wear believes implicitly in newspaper advertising is significant.

The sale of semi-durable goods is enhanced by local newspaper selling. The same newspaper is read several times a day. Thus, the product reaches many markets and every member of the family comes into contact with the add.

For many consumers "seing is believing" and the printed media conveys a sense of lasting import. Clothing manufacturers know this and sell most of their quality goods through newspapers.

The lasting quality of a newspaper also is important and in sales. Readers often save newspapers for several days and use their advertising pages as a handy reference for finding the best buys for their money.

Reader Comments

Dear Mr. Fisher,

Mrs. Adams has requested me to write you to cancel her subscription to the Mercury as her generation has passed away and of course the names are not familiar to her.

She has recently been in the hospital and her sight is very bad. She also requests me to say that she has read the Mercury from a very small child, and the same Santa Claus appears each year and brings back wonderful memories.

Sincerely,
Mrs. C. C. Adams

Refrigerator Packages Need Clear Marking

Do you know what's in your refrigerator? If it's full of unlabeled leftovers your refrigerator can keep you guessing about its contents, notes Mrs. Ella Anderson, U.K. Extension home management specialist.

When left-overs or foods prepared in advance are wrapped in aluminum foil and refrigerated, you may have a hard time telling what's inside each package. You may have to unwrap several packages to find the one you're looking for--and sometimes you may forget exactly what you put in the refrigerator.

Mrs. Anderson gives this suggestion for labeling these foil packages so you can easily find what you want in the refrigerator.

Use a marker with a brush tip. These come in many different colors, write on almost anything and are quite inexpensive. Before you wrap food, write what it is on one side of the foil.

Youth to Exhibit

All Nicholas County Youth are encouraged to participate in this year's Youth Fair going on this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday in Carlisle.

FFA, FHA, 4-H, and Nicholas County school students will be eligible to exhibit their project and class work at the fair for judging. 4-H entries will include garden, tobacco, canning, cooking, clothing, dairy, beef, rabbits, home furnishings, housekeeping, good grooming, woodwork, electrical, entomology, photography, and project record books.

FHA entries will include clothing, foods, and room improvement. FFA entries will include corn, hay, tobacco, beef, farm shop, dairy, and FFA Record Books.

The Handicraft and Industrial Arts section will include woodworking, metal work, electrical, mechanical drawing, architecural sketching, and industrial arts handicraft. (This section is limited to Industrial Arts students of Nicholas county.)

The General School exhibits will include handwriting by first through sixth grades, Free Hand drawing (first through twelfth grades), any type of map (fourth through twelfth grades), science exhibit or display (fourth through twelfth grades), frieze or mural (fifth through eighth grades), health poster (third through eighth grades), Science poster (fourth through twelfth grades), and an historical, health, safety, or civic exhibit with the use of models or other illustrative devices (fourth through twelfth grades).

The Craft and Hobby Show should be loads of fun. This part of the fair is being sponsored by the Nicholas County Recreation Council to develop more interest in crafts and hobbies. There will be six classes - girl, 8 years of age or under; boy, 8 years of age or under; girl, 9-15 years of age; boy, 9-15 years of age; boy or girl 16-21 years of age; and adult class.

Many new Peace Corps programs in agriculture will start this fall. Nearly a hundred more agricultural Volunteers have been requested for programs beginning training in September and October. These Volunteers will be sent to Chile, Ecuador, Kenya, Cameroon, Thailand, and the Philippines.

The types of jobs vary greatly for these programs. In Thailand and the Philippines the request is primarily for farmers with several years of experience. In Kenya, several soil and crop specialists have been requested along with three Veterinarians. Ecuador has requested rural youth with 4-H or FFA experience and backgrounds in livestock and crop management.

A college degree is not necessary for many of the current fall agriculture programs. Married couples may serve together, if they have no dependents under eighteen.

For more information on these upcoming Peace Corps programs and a questionnaire contact the County Extension Office or write directly to the Agricultural Desk Officer, Peace Corps, Washington, D. C. 20525
