DRIVE TO SURVIVE IN '65

September is a homecoming month, a back-to-school, back-to-work, back-to-normal month for children, businessmen and housewives. The Labor Day holiday period marks the last living before we settle down to routine, before we prepare for the chill of fall and winter.

During the past few months, as we roamed the outdoors, enjoying the sunshine and warm breezes, we put winter and its burdens behind us. Clear skies and bright days lulled us into a sense of security.

Now, we must face again rain-slick roads and foggy vistas.

We hurry to work and play. Now, it is time to evaluate our driving habits, and make corrections which will turn them into living habits.

Courtesy and planning pay big dividends in traffic safety. Allow your self time to reach your destination in spite of traffic congestion. Take time to rest when you feel tired or tense.

Signal correctly, watch for oncoming cars, and obey traffic signs.

Think seriously of the responsibility you carry behind the wheel of a car. THINK before you speed, fail to yield the right of way, cross the center line, pass on a hill, or drink before you drive.

With Labor Day and the end of summer only a few days away, plan now for safe driving the months to come. Let's cut the 1964 traffic fatality toll of 50,000.

Drive to survive in '65.

Careful use of Pesticides is important according to the Veterinary Department, University of Kentucky.

First, read the label before you buy. Be certain it is the proper chemical for your use.

Second, read, study and follow the directions before applying.

Third, use recommended precautions for safety.

Fourth, Do not make more material for the job to be done, than is necessary.

Fifth, Clean spray equipment after use. Dispose of excess spray and cleanings from the equipment where it will not get into water supply or food.

Sixth, Dispose of empty containers and pesticides that are not to be used, by burning and/or burying in an isolated place where it will not be disturbed.

(a) Do not burn herbicide containers. Smash them and bury them.

(b) Do not inhale smoke from burning pesticides.

(c) Smash or cut holes in metal containers to prevent their reuse. Break all glass containers and bury them.

Seventh, After cleaning all other equipment and disposing of containers and washings, the operator should put all contained clothing in the wash. Then he should, to prevent absorption of pesticide through the skin, take a bath using plenty of soap and water.

Eighth, Make a record of the pesticide name, amount used and where applied.

It is possible to control body weight by the amount and kind of food one eats, and by the exercise one gets. Generally, the type of foods to emphasize, if weight is a problem, are those low in calories and high in food value in order to satisfy the body requirements for good health. By careful planning, choosing and
