Does your young student have a proper home study lamp?

Schoolwork is difficult enough without adding the burden of poor home study lighting. Get a lamp designed for home study. Here are the specifications.

(1) Lamp shade should be at least 16 inches in diameter. (2) Bottom edge should be about 15 inches above the desk top. (3) Light should be widely diffused, either by means of a translucent open-top shade, a diffusing bowl, or both. Avoid a lamp that projects only a tight, glaring concentration of light. (4) Be sure the bulb is large enough (at least 150 watts).

A lamp that meets these specifications will help your young students do more and better homework.

Yes, The Bible Has a LIVING Witness

It may sound absurd to say this about a collection of writings prepared so many centuries ago.

For in that space of time every living thing on earth has been repeatedly replaced. Empires and whole civilizations have run their course and disappeared. Who, then, could possibly be still around to bear living witness to events so remote in human history?

The answer is, of course--the Catholic Church.

The Church has been carrying on its work of salvation for years before the New Testament writings were completed. And from the very beginning the sacred texts were in her custody and were used in her ceremonies. When the time came to decide which writings were to be accepted as divinely inspired, it was the Church which made the official decision.

For more than a thousand years prior to the invention of printing by movable type, all copies of the Scriptures were laboriously hand-made by monks and scholars of the Catholic Church. With the perfection of the printing process in 1440, one of the first and certainly the most famous publication of the time was the Vulgate version of the Catholic Bible -- the celebrated Gutenberg.

Not all Christians agree exactly in all their interpretations of the Scriptures. But all can agree that the Bible is the inspired word of God...that the New Testament presents the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. For we have in the Catholic Church, a living witness to prove it.

Being responsible for the formation of the New Testament, and as custodian for the Old, the Catholic Church can provide a great deal of interesting and helpful information about the Bible. We have put some of this into a pocket-size pamphlet which we will be happy to send free to any Bible lover who requests a copy.

It contains a short story of the Bible...explains why the Catholic Bible contains 46 Old Testament books, inherited from the Jews, and 27 New Testament books, which the Church approved as inspired...gives you solid reasons why you can believe the Bible, but why the Scriptures are not easy to understand...tells you what Catholics believe about the Bible and how they use it.

You can get your free copy of this interesting pamphlet by writing your name and address on the accompanying coupon and mailing it today. You can study it in complete privacy and without obligation. If it raises any questions in your mind and you want additional answers, we will be glad to supply them. But nobody will call on you.

Fill in the coupon and mail it today. Just ask for Pamphlet No. KC-3.
