The Danger Signs

Director J. Edgar Hoover of the Federal Bureau of Investigation recently said: "In America as a nation being swept by an epidemic of spiritual malnutrition. I fervently hope not; but the danger signs are all too clear. I fear that the public may be coming to accept widespread lawlessness as an unavoidable adjunct to our way of life."
"What has happened to the civic pride, the righteousness and the otherwise respectable citizens who turn their backs on helpless victims of beatings, robberies and sex crimes? The incredibly indifferent attitude of these people is excruciatingly heavy toll. It has helped to turn the streets and parks of many cities into virtual no-man's-lands."

Farm & Home

The analysis shows a high-protein and low-fiber content of the quality hay is above average in quality. The more mature plants become too mature has a much better chance of being of high quality than hay harvested at the first-cutting stage. University scientists found, for example, that the total digestible nutrients in first-cutting forage decreased approximately 0.5 percent on the dry basis for each day of delay in cutting. As one would expect, hay cut at a later date, such as in the immature stage than hay cut at a later date, such as in the more leafy and less stemmy, and in lower in fiber. Thus, we can see how the chemical analysis may coincide with the judgement of the cows that exhibit their appraisal by eating more of the good hay. Likewise, their appraisal will usually come close to predicting an appraisal based on the following factors:
"Anything that might alter the palatability of the hay (such as rain causing the hay to be musty and objectionable) will reduce consumption and thus reduce the correlation between results from either the laboratory analysis or digestion trial appraisals and that based on amounts consumed by the cows. ## Agree or Not, I say what I Think...

By S. C. Van Curen
Frankfort, Ky.—Legislators should not be allowed to hear a preliminary budget estimate of $1.7 to $1.8 billion from Finance Commissioner Felix Foyner when they assemble next Sunday at Kentucky Dam Village for the pre-legislative conference.
This is the meeting where legislators get briefed on the governor's program before they assemble here the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January for the biennium session of the General Assembly.
Gov. Edward T. Breathitt's first budget was $1.4 billion and it was admittedly an "optimistic" figure according to the budget experts.
Federal legislation has the budget experts in Frankfort in a dither when it comes to forecasting a budget for the next biennium. Medicare, federal aid to education, Appalachia and other federal programs just haven't been assessed by federal authorities as yet. This puts the state experts in "wonderland," so to speak, when it comes to making a close estimate of budget.

A Future Miss Christmas Seals

Only three years old, Alexandra Shеды already knows what proper for the holiday season. Give a Merry Christmas and use lots of Christmas Seals.
After the 1966 session of the General Assembly. The question is up to the legislators.
Recent requests from automobile insurance companies to increase rates, plus varying conditions in other insurance fields, seems sufficient cause for Commissioner William Ivin to have something to say to legislators.
Highway fatality rates seem to give reason for Safety Commissioner Glenn Lovren to make a plea to legislators for tighter safety laws, including pre-licensing inspection and physical examinations for drivers.
Not on the discussion agenda, but to be a top topic in rooms and with the governor is leadership in the House and Senate for the 1966 session. Look for these confirmations the night of January 4—Senator J. D. (Biggie) Luckman as majority leader, former Gov. Lawrence W. Weather as pro tem and Senator Mike Duffy as caucus chairman. In the House it will be a repeat performance with Shelby McCallum as speaker, Dr. Mitchell Denham as leader and Lewis Denton as caucus.

From the Diary of a Country Editor

By Warren R. Fisher Sr.
A strange Autumn, of fields blanketed with snow, while red and gold flame in field and woodland. Here and there still the leaves cling on tenaciously and yesterday I saw the sun transform two yellow maples into veritable flowers so that they flamed against the background of a field of young, eye-like Dutch tulips in the spring, when the grass shows its tenderest green. Only a few days left of this beauty, of painted leaves and tawny chrysantheums, braving the black frost in some sheltered corner, ere late November rushes upon the lingering flurry of departed October and tears all to tatters with her icy breath. Only a few days left of this lingering loveliness here and there, a loveliness that has not the freshness of Spring, the fullness of Summer, but hints of the beauty of both seasons and a mellow completeness all its own. Autumn—as least when the sun shines—has ceased to be a season of yellow to me; and I think it will not be sad for anyone who marks the grandeur of Nature's quiet certitude, the orderly assurance with which she sets about her preparation for winter. Closely she wraps her infant buds against the

"We lack but open eye and ear to find the Orient's marvels here; The still, small voice in Autumn's hush. You maple wood the burning bush."
What is this Nature, this power that moves in such never-ending cycles and with such certitude? I may answer that to your own comfort: If the "still, small voice" speaks for you in Autumn's hush, in the drifting of seed pods, the tight-wrapped buds of bare branches, the uncaring flight of the migrating bird, then are you doubly fortunate, for you are them.
"Slave to no sect, who takes no private road. But looks through Nature up to Nature's God."
