Make Holidays Safe Driving Day

Frankfort -- "The greatest Christmas saving Kentuckians can make for themselves is life," says Glenn Lovern, commissioner of the Kentucky Department of Public Safety. "If each Kentucky motorist tries to obey traffic regulations and develop a safe driving attitude, we can save nine or more lives during the 1965 Christmas holidays."

According to statistics kept by the Division of State Police, Frankfort, nine persons died in Kentucky as a result of motor vehicle accidents during the four-day Christmas holiday last year. There were 294 traffic accidents with 180 persons injured in that time period.

During the two-day New Year's Eve holiday, one person was killed in a traffic accident and 145 were injured.

"Each injury and fatality affected not only the individual directly involved," said Lovern, "but the family and friends for whom the joy of the season was ruined."

The primary cause of these accidents, according to the State Police, was driving while under the influence of alcohol. Speeding and inattentiveness while driving ranked second and third as the contributing factors in traffic accidents.

During the 1964, Christmas season, from the hours 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. were the most dangerous for drivers to be out on the road. There were 63 accidents occuring in that time range.

Drivers between the ages of 25 to 34 had the most accidents during Christmas and New Year's with 148 involved in accidents and three killed.

State Troopers will be out in full force for the holiday season, Lovern said. Through the use of increased patrols, the Air Traffic Control and the Courtesy Wagon, the State Police hope to be on hand wherever needed, whether it is to arrest a violator or to aid a motorist in distress.

"All the precautions which the Department of Public Safety can take to curtail the rising accident toll will do no good if Kentuckians refuse to obey traffic regulations and their own good sense," Commissioner Lovern said. "We must make this the merriest Christmas and the happiest New Year's by driving safely and sanely."

Commissioner Lovern cited the following ways in which Kentuckians can avoid traffic accidents: Observe traffic regulatory signs, obey all speed limits, and have brakes, turn signals, windshield wipers, head and tail lights, and tires checked and approved for safe winter driving.

He also suggested that drivers adjust their driving habits to road and weather conditions and that drivers make certain that they are in top physical and mental condition before they get behind the wheel of a motor vehicle.

Christmas Story

By Lee Walker

Blinky Ames slipped through the window with the ease of long experience, flicked on the pencil flashlight and surveyed his new surroundings.

Nothing fancy, but there should be several items of value about the place. After all, he didn't want much for this Christmas eve, only enough to get by. If not, a few trinkets, enough to hock for the price of a fancy meal and a little something to cheer his insides.

He moved silently to the bureau. The right drawer produced some cuff links, a tie pin and a few other items, none of apparent real value. Nothing on the left but a collection of old letters, neatly wrapped. Blinky put them back. He didn't have time for reading, even if they might be love letters. He was on business.

Second drawer. Shirts. Wrong size, but no matter. Blinky could turn them into a buck or two if nothing else turned up. Nothing did in the third drawer; pretty much the same.

Discovery

Blinky let the beam of the flashlight play about the room. Now, this was more like it. A portable typewriter. If there's nothing smaller, this one item will take care of everything. No need to appear too conspicuous walking down the street. With the case closed, he could be a businessman returning home from a late engagement. Just the ticket.

Blinky pulled the paper from the typewriter and set it aside.

He reached for the typewriter, paused, extracted the paper from the roller and set it aside. Then, cautiously, he picked up the paper and began to read the neatly-typed letter.

Dear John:

How's this for a sad story? We were all set to make our annual visit to the folks down on the farm. Everybody comes for the holidays, you know. This was two weeks ago. That's when I lost my job. Old Skinflint let me go without a day's notice or a day's pay. Before I can pack and get out, the wife calls to say the house is on fire. One of the kids got into the closet with a lighter and everything's up in smoke. The kid is in the hospital. I lost my hospitalization plan when I lost the job and I didn't have any insurance on the house. And now, it's Christmas Eve. Wanna hear how all this will end? Don't go away. I am going to leave the hotel room long enough to call my wife and then I'll give you the grand finale.

Improved

Some hours later Joe James let himself into his hotel room. The movie had lasted longer than he'd planned. He'd have to get right back to work. He didn't notice anything wrong until he sat down and reached for the typewriter. A moment later, he was reaching for the phone.

"Harry, the greatest idea you ever had was for me to rent this hotel room and stay here until I get the plot worked out for that New Year story.

"Have I got it! Well, I thought I had. But I want to take a new turn. I can give you a real human interest angle, real gravel, so great you won't believe it.

"No, it isn't far-out. It's for real. It actually happened. Let me give you the picture. Listen to what I had picked out on my typewriter earlier this evening. Ready?

Coming Up

"You're right. Without an ending it's nothing. But do I have an ending. You won't believe it. I left this message in my typewriter, went out for a while and guess what I found when I got back? Someone had been in my room.

"Sure, I still got a typewriter. I've also got five dollars and a note that says, "Buddy, you need it more'n me!"

"All right, if you won't buy it as a New Year story, I'll save it until next Christmas. Yeah, Harry. Merry Christmas to you, too."

Dear Santa,

I am a little girl five years old. I have a sister, Shady who is 4, and my little brother Billy is 3. We have tried awful hard to be good this year.

Would you bring my sister and I a pretty baby doll that talks or crys, some games and anything else you think good little girls would like.

My brother only wants a lot of tractors and trucks with wagons, and anything else you'd like him to have.

Please bring my Mommy something and my Daddy too, who won't spend Christmas with us. He will be on a big ship somewhere in the Mediterrian, it won't be hard to find.

Don't forget my Mama and Papaw Fryman and Mamaw and Papaw Loyn Mamaw and Papaw Lyons back in Kentucky, also all the other little boys and girls everywhere.

We will leave a snack and some coffee for you under our Christmas tree.

Your little friends,

the Christmas Visitors

By Mary Hannah

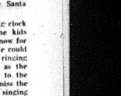
Jimmy Roberts looked longingly out the window. The snow covered fields and barns were lovely in the soft moonlight. What a way to spend Christmas Eve, he thought, all alone with a kid brother.

What a Christmas! Dad in the hospital after an automobile accident, mother spending practically every day and night with him, and me, here all alone with a kid that can't even stay awake long enough to welcome Santa Claus.

Jimmy looked at the big clock on the kitchen wall. The kids were probably gathering now for the annual sleigh ride. He could just imagine the laughter ringing about the Macklin farm as the two teams were hitched to the homemade sleigh. He'd miss the ride over the fields, the singing of Christmas Carols and then, the return home to the warmth of the fireside and the welcome sight of mom and dad sitting nearby. That's how Christmas ought to be; how Christmas had always been.

Sounds

Jimmy walked into the living room. Sammy was asleep, sprawled on the rug before the fireplace. Jimmy sat down in an easy chair and studied the room.



Out of the sleigh they came, everyone from miles around.

the flickering fire, the beautifully-lighted tree and the heaping presents beneath. How quiet was the world, except for the crackling of the fire. How quiet, except, for another sound. Sleigh bells! They were coming this way.

And they were slowing. He could hear them.

Nearer and nearer came the voices and the bells. Jimmy dashed to the door, with Sammy, now wide awake, right on his heels.

"Hello, hello. We wish you a Merry Christmas." The voices rang out in chorus and out of the sleigh they came, the Smiths, the Jones, the Attebury, the Macklins, everyone for miles around.

Bearing Gifts

Happily, each bearing gifts, they marched into the house, placing packages ceremoniously on the livingroom floor. From somewhere Mr. Macklin produced a beard and a Santa cap. The room became hushed.

"Now Jimmy and Sammy," Mr. Macklin said, "while Mrs. Macklin and the ladies prepare some hot chocolate in the kitchen, I speak for all of us. We know that your Christmas cannot be the merriest under the circumstances. But you must remember that these circumstances are just temporary. Most of us visited your father today. He'll be home soon, and good as new. All of us would have loved for you boys to spend Christmas Eve with us, but we decided it would be better if we brought a little of our Christmas spirit to you . . ."

Sammy was fumbling among the presents. Jimmy, a bit uncomfortable and afraid that his emotions were showing, straightened one of the ornaments on the Christmas tree. "I don't know what to say."

Sing Out

"Don't say it," young Ted Macklin shouted. "Sing it." And he led off with a round of "Jingle Bells."

Soon, mom came home; more Christmas Carols. Mr. Macklin passed out the gifts. Each was opened to a chorus of "Oohs" and "Aahs" -- except for dad's. These were placed beneath the tree with the rest of the family packages. As Mr. Macklin said, "You can have Christmas again when dad comes home."

Jimmy stood on the porch and watched the sleigh disappear into the night, carrying with it the sounds of merry laughter and jingling bells. Things weren't so bad after all. And, there was still another Christmas yet to come.
