Geological Survey
Issuing Study Kits

Since early last year, the Kentucky Geological Survey at the University of Kentucky has presented over 1,500 rock-oriented kits to elementary and secondary schools as a means of acquainting youngsters with the state's most common geological resources. Each study kit—one available to each school—contains 24 specimens, plus a booklet describing them and telling of their value. Dr. Wallace Hagan, state geologist and KGS director, said distribution will continue as long as the division's budget permits and that kits will be sent to schools as they are established. Thus far, they are mailed only to a choice of winners have grades above the third and who have a teacher for each grade.

A WINDOW on the WORLD
with RURAL ELECTRICITY
Today, all Americans can sit in on the great events of our times. In addition to all the comforts and labor-saving tools of the Twentieth Century which electricity has brought to rural America, the power line has truly opened a window on the rest of the world.
Rural electrification has made it possible for people in the most remote areas to be well-informed by radio and television. Rural people can now take an even greater part in America's social, political, and economic life, thanks to rural electrification.
We are proud of our role in helping to open this window on the world!
