Judging by the increasing rate of juvenile delinquency, too many parents are leaving to the schools or the police departments the job of training their children in concepts of right and wrong. This parents are delinquent before their children are.

It is now being proposed that courses in ethics or rules of behavior be added to the curriculum of American high schools. That would be a good thing.

A Passing Season

The seasons of the year run their course swiftly. No one can be better than one of millions of youngsters. For the summer vacation is already over and with it the beginning of the next school year approaches swiftly.

Many, perhaps most, will return to school with a feeling of regret. Summer vacation, with all its joys and many-aided attractions, is fun. It's only human nature to wish it could continue forever. But for all of the labor-saving progress that has been made, we still live in an era in which work and knowledge are essential. And the advances in science and technology have vastly increased the kind and amount of education that is needed if the young man or woman is to have a successful career as an adult.

From the Diary of a Country Editor

By Warren R. Fisher Jr.

Ah, but the silence, the sad demerit of his who was the player of musicians, when May wreathed my arbor with roses and the tangled vines a blizzard of these who were blue-green eggs for my slim cat-bird.

And then that same who was the heart bursting sound pouring forth like a benediction that will never be a heart's twilight with joy, My catbird, forsooth, has heard the whisper of the Change.

From the porches of their little grey home stop the pole my purple great chaser their fledglings with maras chattering and flapping of wings, when they would rest a moment from their circling, for soon young wings must beat, beat steadily, tirelessly over long miles to a winter home they have never seen, where palms wave and bright-foliated birds are like flowers. Rarely is the call of the familiar robin heard and the rooster blackbird that makes of himself a very pest in early summer, nests in the woods. Only the little song sparrow, very like his rowdy English cousin, save for the striped wattlecoat, sings sweetly on.

His first began a sunny day in February when I heard the notes from a warm fence corner, sheltered by rose-suckle vines. In these his mate nested this was a concert state all season for one of the sweetest and most plaintive songs of birdland. It was alone these days of Summer's noon, were for the whistling of the great created flycatcher—the wild Irishman of the feathered folk, John B. Borego called him—when the white is almost a shriek in Spring when stars are not assumed to be dead. Now, when other birds are silent his call is almost sweet and seems mellow by the season's maturity. So do we miss the little musician of the feathered choir, when the days of Summer's noontide shimmer on the fields and Nature indicates the signs that is one of the compensations of middle-age.

In James Lane Allen's delightful book, "A Kentucky Cardinal," there is this concluding line: "Ah, but the long, long silence of the trees!" To me it is one of the most expressive lines written by one who had the love of the world of green pastures and peaceful woodlands and the little folk that dwell therein in his heart. Now when the small choristers of the bush

SHORT AND SWEET

One of America's favorite hot weather treats may never have been invented if it were not for a shortage of diabetes.

On a scalding summer day at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904 an ice-cream vendor faced a crisis when he ran out of serving dishes. A Syrian confectioner who sold crisp sugar wafers quickly came to the rescue. He shaped his penny confections into cones to hold the ice cream. The portable combination was an instant success and it was not long before millions were enjoying the crunchy delight. Today Americans pay away four billion dollars for ice cream cones each year, more than half being consumed during the summer months.
