Farm & Home

Two insects are damaging home plantings now, says Dr. R. L. Miller, U.K. Cooperative Extension Service entomologist.

They are the adult May beetle, feeding on pin oak trees; and the holly leaf miner, attacking that favorite ornamental.

Miller said the May beetle is feeding in the top third of pin oak trees. These insects are brown, hard-shelled beetles. They feed at night and are attracted by light. They buzz during flight.

Use the 50 percent wettable powder of Sevin, at two tablespoons per gallon of water. Cover foliage thoroughly.

The holly y leaf miner makes irregular tunnels inside holly leaves. Tops of these tunnels protrude above the leaf surface. Larva of a small fly is responsible. About mid-May the adult fly will emerge from the tunnels of a new generation. Spray trees thoroughly with Sevin wettable powder, two to four gallons of water. Cover foliage up to May 20. Make a second application between May 25 and 30. It's dangerous to store gasoline in a glass container. Buy a metal safety can for storing any inflammable fuel. Jugs that once held kerosene, oil or gasoline, often gasoline accidents would result if high heat were applied to them. A glass jug just isn't suited for gasoline as it breaks easily. In a fire a gasoline filled jug will either crack or explode depending on how tight the cap fits and how much fuel is in the jug. In either case, it really "adds fuel to the fire." A metal safety-type can with a closed cap that will close automatically.

Change Is Inevitable

by Samuel S. Talbert, Ph. D., Department of Journalism, University of Mississippi

Since the invention of the wheel and lever, some time before the dawn of civilization, automation has affected employment. In spite of fear to the contrary, the result has been more jobs at higher pay for those who seemed to be temporarily displaced.

Automation has had a similar effect on trade. Any one of 1929-30 vintage can recall dozens of stores, stables, and service firms which no longer exist. The same person if he cares to look, can count dozens of new and prosperous firms which replaced the old companies.

Change is inevitable and it seems to be awfully fast at the present. The modern retailer in nearly every field is in much the same position as the buggy salesman of forty years ago. He can add automobiles to his line or forcibly await the return of the horse.

A grocery may argue that modern packaging increases the cost of foods by 25 per cent, yet, even at much lower cost, he will find it impossible to sell flour from a barrel or crackers from a sack.

The modern consumer is willing to pay for the cost of packaging—using thrift as a primary consideration. What seems to be expensive packaging reduces waste, spoilage and preparation time.

In other retail areas comparable changes have taken place. Service firms such as restaurants, laundries, repair shops, and banks are becoming more economical because of automation. When a consumer gets a minimal value on his time, he finds that he saves by paying a small fee to use the machine and knowledge of specialists.

The new retailer, the specialist, however, are able to make swift adjustments only by constantly informing an ever-changing consumer that a company is ready to meet new demands—in short, through firm, complete, and consistent advertising.
