Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

I think it is a disgrace that in this day and time the people of our community are more interested in the "Governor's Tour" and similar activities than they are in the health of their families. In our midst there is a very unsanitary sewage condition. The condition that I speak of is the fact that parts of our community are unable to have access to the central sewage system because they are not in the city limits. The parents of our community certainly would not throw their children in front of a car yet they turn their backs on a problem such as this, which endangers the lives of their families.

I am not critizing the central sewage system which has been recently put in operation. This system can carry the sewage for a town twice the size of Carlisle, so why not extend our city limits and hook everyone in such sections a Arnold Heights, Shepherd Hills and Henryville on to this central system.

One of the biggest dangers is the creek that runs from one end of town to the other. This creek is used for sewage disposal by many families because it is the only means provided for them. The creek makes a good home for flies and mosquitoes which carry such diseases as typhoid fever, dysentary and encephalitis. There has been one proven case of dysentary this fall in our local hospital. Could this disease have been carried into our "city limits" by a fly which visited an open toilet in one of these areas of town?

Our community leaders have provided us with a new Health Building and the local hospital but they have forgotten about the root of the problems with which these agencies must deal. The public should investigate the situation and insist that such conditions are corrected, so that our new central sewage system can do the job it was built to do.

"A Student"

Dear Editor,

We are proud of our "city fathers". They have provided us with a home for the elderly, a local hospital, a new health center, and a new sewage system (fine but incomplete). The fact that we would like to bring to their attention is the incomplete sewage system. Parts of our community are not hooked on to this system because they are not in the city limits. The sections of the community which we speak of are Arnold Heights, Liberty Heights, Shepherd Hill, Henryville, and parts of Dorseyville. Until the entire community is included, this system which is costing $750,000 over the next 30 years is not going to solve our problems of disease carried by raw sewage.

Raw sewage is a perfect breeding place for flies and mosquitoes which carry such diseases as tuberculosis, typhoid fever, malaria, and dysentery (several cases of this desease have occurred in our community, this fall). For many of the people who live in these parts of our community, the creek that runs through town is the only sewage system they have. People living near the hospital have actually seen raw sewage and toilet tissue in the creek. If all parts of our community were connected, we would not see such unsightly sights or smell such unpleasant ordors as people have to contend with.

Realizing that our parents are spending all this money for a central sewage system, we fell that it is a disgrace to see our community leaders paying more attention to developing Lake Carnico than to the health of our community. The taxpayers should demand that our city council annex these parts of our community and provide everyone the protection against disease.

Two students

(Editor's Note; Brushy Fork need not be contaminated if the same stringent rules that govern sewage disposal at Lake Carnico were enforced in areas upstream from Carlisle. At Lake Carnico, if a given lot owner's area does not pass a percolation test, his only alternative, if he wishes to have an inside toilet and running water, is to install a small scale sewer plant which utilizes a process known as "aerobic digestion". These systems take the raw sewage into an aeration tank where it is mixed with large volumes of air, the oxygen induced into this liquid sets up a "perfect environment for the aerobic bacteria which digests the organic material." The stable, orderless effluent from the semi-commercial sewage system is disposed of by any means deemed practical by the local health authority.)

From the Diary of a Country Editor

by Warren R. Fisher Sr.

Helgho, a pleasant interlude, these four weeks, albeit strenuous, and I know my fledgling daughter's male parent--though he has not so many years of normal expectancy to remember in as she--will not soon forget, nor will my wife, poor wretch, to whom vacations come all too infrequently, fail to recall with pleasure her brief visits in this double fortnight. . . "What friends thou hast and their adoption tried," quoth old Polonius; and I fear my seemingly undying shyness leads me to follow more closely perhaps than young Laertes did the teachings of his wise old parent. But with such good fellows, men and women, as constituted the personnel of the Democratic State Campaign Committee, one must needs soon shed any shell of shyness that enwraps him. I think of them all, as we drive over the winding lanes of the long detour, I think of the newspaper men--some old friends, some new acquaintances--that I have seen nearly everyday for the last month and I come to the conclusion that in types and ink and yellow "copy" paper there must, of necessity, be some sovereign alchemy that makes of all those who dabble in the "blue-black" good fellows, generous, tolerant and understanding. But I think most perhaps, of the unruffled chairman of the campaign committee, Vego Barnes. In all my life, I think, I have never seen a man of more perfect and constant poise, even under the most trying circumstances, nor a shrewder judge of men, nor an abler diplomat, nor a man with a kinder heart. Him I shall always remember.

Presently we come back to the main highway and pass rapidly on into the hills of Franklin, and as twilight comes, to the crest of the beautiful hill at Frankfort. "There is the capitol, my darlin'" I say to my youngster; "and the white building beyond in the shrubberies is where the Governor lives." To which my young daughter replies: "And do 'Governder' Chandler's children live there too?" My fledgling thinks, not without reason, perhaps, that when one embarks upon the hazardous career of politics in Kentucky, women and children are left at home. . .And I fall to thinking, as we follow the meanders of the hill down into the town, of the amazing career of Kentucky's young chief executive, of the honors that have come to him so early in life, won partly by his warm smile, his engaging personality, and by that priceless quality of instinct that I seem to sense he possesses. This then, I muse, should save him from the political crucifixion that Kentucky has accorded so many of her Governors. .To stop at the hostelry a moment and enquire for "Scoop" Sherwood, who has preceded us and whom Charley Fennell says is in some ways a reincarnation of Sir John Falstaff. But "Scoop" has more than his ready laugh to endear him to so many fold. North of his eyebrows lies grey matter that functions swiftly and well--and a corking good reporter, my masters.

On through the rolling pastures of the Bluegrass to Lexington, where we stop for steaming bowls of oyster stew, mighty tasty, and greatly refreshed set out again over that old trail so romantically linked with the pioneer history of Kentucky--the trail to the Blue Licks, to the little settlement of Limestone, now Maysville, and to old Chillicothe. The dauntless Boone followed it, in his escape from the Indians, as he slipped unerringly back to warn the settlement at Boonesboro. The rash, but valiant defenders of Bryan's Station followed it, to be drawn into an ambush and their doom at the great loop of the Licking. . .So, over the old Maysville & Lexington pike, where once stage coaches bumped and swayed behind galloping horses, into the hills of Nicholas, home.

Tired we are, so very tired. But I must needs sit by the fire which crackles cheerily on the hearth and muse awhile. And I feel that sense of futility that assails me, whenever I have spent much time in cities. One might call it envy, perhaps, for I am keenly conscious of my comparative poverty, after being in contact with the rugbless drive and keen concentration of business energies that make for fat bank accounts--money, that enables one to go a-questing through air or sea to distant shores that I, no doubt, will never see, save through the eyes of books; money, that means comfort and security and quick, courteous service. . .Ah, to be able to lie on golden sands and watch white sails against an azure sky! And not to count the cost.

FOUR GET NEW

Responsibility In Guard Unit

The appointment of four men to new areas of responsibility in the Carlisle National Guard was announced today by Captain Jerry W. Heaton, Lexington, Commanding Officer of Carlisle's Battery c, 3d Howitzer Battalion, 138th Artillery. The new assignments, which are effective immediately go to Sergeants Jessy C. Mynear, Gordon T. Sargent, Donald Haney, and Santford C. Graves, Jr.

Sergeant Jessy Clay Mynear, Route 2, Carlisle, has been appointed as the new First Sergeant of Battery C. His new assignment puts him in the top enlisted position in the Battery with responsibility for administration, operation and training of the entire Battery.

Sergeant Mynear has been a member of the Carlisle unit since May 26, 1952. He has served as Cannoneer, Mechanic, Assistant Section Chief and most recently, Section Chief of the Battery's Ammunition Section.

A former student in the Carlisle City Schools, Sergeant Mynear is now associated with Ralph Bowen in the plumbing business in Carlisle.

He is married to the former Shirley Bunsell of Nicholas County and they have three children, Sharon Kay, 10; Rita Gayle, 5; and Stephen Clay, 3.

Sergeant Mynear is the son of Mrs. John Mynear and the late John Mynear of Carlisle.

Accompany Miss Weldon

Miss Zelma Monroe and Miss Lulie Logan, retired assistant state leaders, accompanied Miss Myrtle Weldon to Carlisle recently for her presentation of slides on Hawaii. Miss Monroe is recognized for her consideration of others, development of leadership and her belief in rural women.

Miss Logan supervised the homemakers program in Nicholas County when Mrs. Eugene Neal and Miss Emma Barnes were home agents. Much of Miss Logan's effectiveness was due to her understanding of the individual problems of counties and the realization that program planning must meet the needs of the people.

These ladies were the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Neal.
