WORKING FOR KENTUCKY AGRICULTURE

Senator John Sherman Cooper's work on the Senate Agriculture Committee has helped every farm family in Kentucky. He has fought for the tobacco program, soil and water conservation, the voluntary farm commodity programs, sustaining funds for the Production Credit Associations and REA, watershed projects, and dozens of other programs of lasting benefit to the farmer. The farm community doesn't have a better friend in the Congress.

Burley Officers Re Elected

Officers of the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association, which administers the price support program for burley in five states, were re-elected at the annual organizational meeting of the association in Lexington Oct. 12.

Renamed were John M. Berry of New Castle, president; David J. Williams of Richmond, vice president; W. L. Staton, Lexington, executive secretary-treasurer, and C. J. King, Lexington, assistant secretary-treasurer.

Directors-at-large for three states also were re-elected. They are David J. Williams, for Kentucky; George Elliott of Rising Sun, Ind., for Indiana, and Raymond Satterfield of West Union, Ohio, for Ohio.

The officers and directors-at-large are named for one-year terms.

Before the election, seven directors who were elected in their respective districts of the Burley Association last month were sworn in for three-year terms. A third of the 25-member board of directors are elected each year for terms of three years.

Byram Ratliff, Sharpsburg, was elected director from the association's 14th district, succeeding Clark Rogers. Six other directors re-elected included Owen C. Bouse, Midway, A. W. Ayers, Owenton, John M. Berry, New Castle, C.L. Satterwhite, Jonesville; Joe McDaniel, Cynthiana, and Joe McKinney of Brooksville.

The Burley Association administers the price support program for burley in Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia and Missouri. In addition, the association represents growers in all matters of interest and concern to them, and operates export promotion and information programs.

Why do Kentucky's leading newspapers support Constitutional revision?

"Constitution aids farmers"

". . . The revision will aid the progress of the state's total agricultural industry as well as the overall economy . . . The farmer is given a special tax break he does not have under the present Constitution. In addition, farmers, like other taxpayers, can save millions in school taxes — since the cost of school construction financing can go down under the Revised Constitution . . . (Under the revised constitution) The State Department of Agriculture can be strengthened to provide better services to farmers through career leadership . . ."

GLEANER & JOURNAL, Henderson, Ky.

"A better school system and free of politics"

". . . The proposed constitution provides for an elected non-partisan (school) board to sit and then appoint a school superintendent. Education would be his only concern. And Kentucky schools . . . would move faster. Educators agree. Democrats and Republicans alike, that the proposed non-partisan system would do much to eliminate the heavy hand of politics from Kentucky Education."

PROGRESS, Dawson Springs, Ky.

"Divorcing education from politics"

"One of the most desirable features of the modernized constitution offered Kentuckians is its divorcement of public education from partisan politics . . ."

LOUISVILLE TIMES, Louisville, Ky.

"Clearly worded, readily understood"

". . . This newspaper is convinced that the interests of Kentuckians will best be served by adopting the new basic law to replace the 75-year-old constitution of 1891 . . . There will be many more discussions and interpretations before election day. But there is no substitute for first-hand knowledge and the new document is clearly worded and readily understood."

INDEPENDENT, Ashland, Ky.

"Strong statewide support appearing for revision of state Constitution"

". . . One factor, we think, in the rising support for (constitutional) revision is the frankness with which the Kentuckians for a Better Constitution and other leaders are conducting the revision campaign. They are urging everyone to read the proposed changes, they are explaining the revision honestly and openly, they are inviting critical study . . . This is the kind of campaign that appeals to intelligent voters, and they are responding by giving the proposed revision their endorsement and active support."

HERALD-LEADER, Lexington, Ky.

"Entire text of Constitution is submitted to vote of people"

"We have been questioned as to the reason for the charter being submitted in its entirety. The answer is that this method makes it possible for voters to know exactly what will be contained in the new document . . . It may not be a perfect document, but it is 100 percent improvement over the anti-quated charter designed in 1891."

REGISTER, Richmond, Ky.

"Facts win converts for revision"

"Having all the facts can make a lot of difference. A case in point is the Kentucky Municipal League's decision to support the proposed new state constitution, reversing a position taken last May . . . Those who joined in reversing the league's position in this important matter see the issue in its true light and through intelligent eyes. We believe the majority of voters will do likewise when they go to the polls November 8, provided enough arm themselves with the facts beforehand."

LOUISVILLE TIMES, Louisville, Ky.

"A vast improvement"

". . . We do not doubt the integrity of a single individual who participated in the deliberations of the (Constitutional revision) Assembly . . . We believe that most citizens, when they have read and comprehended what is in the document, will feel as we do that it is good, that it is a vast improvement on the old constitution, and that it should be adopted . . ."

SUN-DEMOCRAT, Paducah, Ky.

"Needs to be modernized"

". . . The present constitution of the State of Kentucky was . . . framed to suit that era (1891) and, like the modes and methods of that time, it has served its usefulness and needs to be modernized . . ."

SUN, Springfield, Ky.

"The revised charter offers a new chance for Kentucky"

"This newspaper does, indeed, support the proposed revision of the constitution. It represents for Kentucky an opportunity the state cannot afford to miss . . . (The Revised Constitution) is the result of two years of hard, dedicated, unpaid effort by an assembly of Kentuckians which included many of the state's outstanding minds — men skilled in law and commerce, farming and education, men representing small towns, cities and rural regions, men of all religions, both parties, Negro and white, labor and management, men working with one and only one thing in mind — to give Kentucky a better Constitution than she has, one that will help Kentucky not only catch up with other states but go ahead . . ."

THE COURIER-JOURNAL, Louisville, Ky.

Thinking voters will say "YES" to Constitutional Revision November 8th.

Kentuckians for a Better Constitution, John Fred Williams and Gibson Downing Co-Chairmen; Gil Kingsbury, Secretary-Treasurer.
