Nation's Farmers High Part Of U.S. Economy

Lexington--What's the traditional picture of the American farmer?

A bucolic individual leisurely plowing his fields, placidly reaping crops, and remaining virtually aloof from his fellow citizens in the solitude of his green acres.

The truth is, the American farmer is a hard-nosed businessman fighting the elements to provide food and fiber, and contributing a hugh chunk of income to the nation's economy.

Kentucky's Cooperative Extension Service workers recently were given extracts from a congressional talk made by Congressman J.L. Whitten of Mississippi when he presented the agricultural appropriations bill in the House of Represenatives. Whitten pointed out congress the part American farmers play in U.S. economy.

First, he noted, seven-on-farm Americans feed themselves and 93 other persons. "This enables factory workers, etc. to develop and produce the many items that make up our high standard of living." (In colonial times, 87 persons were on farms, feeding themselves and 13 other persons.)

"The seven percent left on farm have hugh investments in machinery and equipment, thus becoming industry's and labor's biggest market," Mr. Whitten noted.

He says the farmer spends nearly $30 billion a year for goods and services to produce crops and livestock. Another $12 billion a year is spent on the same things city people buy (food, clothing, drugs, furniture, appliances and other products and services).

The U.S. farmer annually buys $3.4 billion worth of new farm tractors and other farm vehicles, machinery and equipment. (It takes 120,000 industrial workers to produce this farm equipment.)

The farmer spends $3.4 billion for fuel and lubricants, and farm machinery maintenance. (Farm production actually uses more petroleum than any other industry.)

"He buys each year 320,000 million pounds of rubber in various products, about 9 percent of the total used in the U.S. and enough to put tires on 6 million autos. He uses 28 billion Kilowatt-hours of electricity annually, and 5 million tons of steel in machinery, trucks, cars, fencing and building materials. In fact, farm use of steel accounts for some 40,000 jobs in the steel industry," Mr. Whitten said.

Bright Ideas for every home with Better Electric Lighting

SAVE EYE-STRAIN with adequate bulbs (150 or R-40*) in reading lamps. Light should be slightly to one side of reading material.

DECORATE WITH LIGHTS. Valances, cornices and wall-brackets create relaxing atmosphere. Use lights to establish "moods" in your home.

EXTRA KITCHEN lights reduce fatigue. Lights under wall cabinets illuminate counter space and create a cheerful character.

WORKSHOPS need adequate lighting, too. Install fixtures about 48 inches above work areas. Have ample outlets for extensions and motors.

Make your home more livable. See us for a free "Adequate Lighting Layout."

farm facts

Forest Facts. Everyone should take time out every once in a while to make an inventory of his progress--to see whether he is gaining or losing ground. In some businesses this can be done often; in farming it should be done annually, but in the public's business of forestry such inventories take place every 10 to 15 years.

An inventory of Kentucky's forest resources, made by the U.S. Forestry Service and Kentucky Division of Forestry, has just been completed, the findings will be of much value to woodusing industries interested in establishing or expanding plants in Kentucky, and to service and professional men interested in improving the forest resources of the state. The last forest inventory was made in 1949 so this one provides a 14 year period for comparisons.

The new inventory is complete in every detail, showing both the acreage and volume of the saw timber and growing stock of each species of commercial tree in every county of the state. Copies of the reports are available from the Division of Forestry, Department of Natural Resources, Frankfort. Among other things, the study shows that in spite of the expansion of urban areas and use of land for highways, lakes, parks and the like, the forest area of Kentucky
