WARD

proved with its own funds without federal funds.

Administratively the record also includes:

First state in the nation to key its bookkeeping and auditing procedures to a method for speedy reimbursement of money by the Federal Government. Some 30 other states have copied Kentucky's system;

Consistently has effected savings in construction equipment, supplies, materials and furnishing by the closest attention to competitive bidding;

Has received good construction bids, despite continually rising costs in highway construction, by allowing contractors ample time to get ready for the work; and

Has prevented, through honest businesslike practices, any scandal within the Department.

Ward disclaims personal credit for the achievements and gives it to the career engineers and administrators of the Highway Department. He calls them the "real strength" of any worthwhile program.

"I am convinced," he has said often publicly and privately, "that the average state employee is just as dedicated and conscientious toward his job as his counterpart in private industry."

Be that as it may, there's much to be said for an executive who, through his own philosophy and hard work, inspires others to follow. There's no secret about Henry Ward's philosophy toward life and toward his job. He wrote a "challenge" and distributed it to all employees of the Highway Department more than two years ago. These were his words:

"Historians agree that civilization and nations have thrived if they met the challenge of their day, otherwise they perished.

"We can apply this criterion to our own lives. Whether we succeed or fail depends on how we meet the challenge of our day.

"We will succeed if we meet the challenge of each day. But the challenge also involves thinking and planning for tomorrow—and many tomorrows of the future.

"To succeed, we must do the job before us—whether anyone else will do it or not. Meeting the challenge of today may mean doing things that will not enhance one's popularity. That's part of the challenge.

"We must take ourselves seriously—and the job that is assigned to us seriously. Each of us must ask the question: What is my job and responsibility?

"Seek out what is the truth—and act accordingly.

"Don't be among the uninformed—or the uncommitted.

"Meeting the challenge requires being informed—and committed.

"Straddling the fence, or attempting to remain uncommitted, constitutes failure to meet the challenge of today.

"The Kentucky Department of Highways has been assigned the task of building and maintaining roads with the funds available for this purpose. "Our challenge is to do the best job possible."

POPULATION EXPLOSION BIGGEST FACTOR IN U.S.

Lexington -- Keep an eye on the population explosion of the future, warns Dr. Charles Hobbs, University of Tennessee animal husbandry department head.

"It's the one factor that
