LET'S LOOK IT OVER
By Governor
EDWARD T. BREATHITT

FRANKFORT---

We have been trying to do everything we can to make vocational training available to more Kentucky students and adults.

Vocational education is designed to meet the needs of high school youths and out-of-school youths and adults--employed, unemployed, and underemployed.

Kentucky has 13 area vocational-technical schools located so as to serve all parts of the state. Twelve extension schools are in operation and 16 more are being built this year.

During the last three years, the number of enrollees in vocational education programs in Kentucky rose from 60, 457 to 93,365.

Largest increases were noted in technical courses, including electronics, drafting and highway technology. The three-year increase in this area was from 6,360 to 23,348 students.

Courses also are offered in business and office education, distributive education, home economics, practical nursing, and agriculture.

Kentucky is ranked high among all the states in vocational training, not only by the U.S. Office of Education, but also by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Mr. E. R. Mitchell, a director of the chamber, wrote me recently as follows:

"I am chairman of the Human Resources Development Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and under the canopy of that committee we deal with vocational education.

"There is no question in our minds that the Commonwealth of Kentucky has done the outstanding job of the nation. Just recently...on a radio panel... I was proud to emphasize the accomplishments of Kentucky in this field."

Grant Venn, an associate U.S. commissioner of education, said in appearing before a Senate subcommittee that Kentucky is far ahead of the 11 other states involved in vocational school construction under the two-year-old Appalachian development program.

And while it is good for Kentucky to receive this type of national recognition, the important thing is that the expansion of the state's vocational school is helping train more Kentuckians for jobs, and jobs are available for practically everyone with a skill.

Federal aid for Appalachian school construction totalled $12,188,000 of which $4,131,000, or more than one-third, went to Eastern Kentucky. Mr. Venn explained that Kentucky was prepared, had a plan ready, and got off to a faster start than the other states.

Besides federal funds, state and local matching funds are used for the construction of vocational schools. From the 1965 state bond issue, approved so overwhelmingly, we are spending nearly $4 million to help build area schools.

Our plans for this year alone call for the construction of 16 more extension centers, operating under the management of area centers, at a total cost of $350,000 to $400,000 each. We expect to have these extensions ready for opening this fall.

The extensions are being built at Greensburg, Russellville, Bardstown, Maysville, Olive Hill, McKell, Corbin, Pineville, Manchester, Whitesburg, Russell Springs, Albany, Beattyville, Inez, Lancaster and Mt. Sterling.

This year also, we will complete expansion costing $300,000 at the Breathitt County school; $350,000 at Belfry, in Pike County, and $200,000 at Barbourville.

There is a growing demand by industry for workmen trained in Kentucky's vocational schools, especially since their curriculums have been broadened to include courses in drafting, electronics, business administration and other skills.

This is borne out by the fact that some of the industry's newest industries are locating near these schools, partly because of the trained personnel that become available.

Examples are the American Metal Products Company at Somerset, and the Rockwell-Standard plant at Winchester, which is not far from the vocational school at Lexington.

Christian Churches Contribute To Homes

An expanded program to assist neglected and dependent children of Kentucky is being undertaken by the Christian Church Children's Home at Danville.

Details of the program, which is designed to provide small-town and rural children with quality care, is explained by the home's superintendent, Henry Lowe.

Lowe announced the employment of Mrs. Mary J. Tuttle, NCSW, as director of social service for the home. Mrs. Tuttle, who has worked for the state Department of Child Welfare since 1952, will direct the Danville facility's social service program.

With addition of Mrs. Tuttle Lowe said the number of children under the foster-home program can be increased from the present 12 to about 50. The number of children who reside at the home is expected to remain at about 35, with a maximum of 40, making a program with a total capacity of 90.

While no qualified Kentucky child will be refused admittance to the home, especial effort will be made to serve the neglected and dependent children of the Appalachia and other rural areas of the state. The goal is to provide them with the kind of high-quality care which exists for the most part only in metropolitan areas of the commonwealth.

Mrs. Tuttle, a native of Sharpsburg and lifelong resident of Kentucky, will assist Lowe in the overall program of the home, concentrating on the children who live in boarding homes and supervising the social service staff which counsels and oversees both foster children and foster parents.

Mrs. Tuttle leaves a position as consultant on licensing for the state Child Welfare Department. She holds a bachelor degree in sociology from the University of Kentucky and has done graduate work at the University of Chicago and has her master's degree from Kent School of Social Work, University of Louisville. She is a member of the National Association of Social Workers, Kentucky Welfare Association, Central Kentucky Women's Club, Kentucky Citizens for Child Welfare and Sharpsburg Christian Church. Her son, William Sharp Tuttle, M. D., lives in Houston, Texas.

The accelerated remedial and therapeutic-care facilities will require more than a doubling of the Danville Home's budget for 1969. The home, which operated without federal or state government subsidies, is a member of The Christian Church Homes of Kentucky, Inc., which has headquarters and operates a home for the elderly in Louisville. Three hundred seventy Christian Churches contribute to the support of the homes.

Existing state-federal, matching-fund public assistance programs do not include children separated from, or who have no families of their own. Care for such children has fallen to voluntary and public (state-local government) agencies, many of which are experiencing difficulty securing funds to operate quality programs.

Alfalfa Weevil Showing Up

Alfalfa growers in Kentucky are faced with a severe infestation of alfalfa weevil again in 1967. The warm days of early March made conditions favorable for weevil eggs to hatch, and the small larva will feed practically anytime temperatures are favorable from now until July. Feeding weevil have been found in all areas of the state, including the Blue Grass Area.

Some growers have achieved a measure of control for the first cutting of alfalfa by use of the flaming technique, but it is now too late in the season for this.

University of Kentucky College of Agriculture entomologist have issued recommendations for weevil control in 1967. This information may be obtained at any County Extension office. Control involves use of one or more recommended insecticides, proper spray equipment, and favorable weather conditions.

Rain will wash off insecticides and decrease their killing power. Less insecticide will be lost if it has a chance to dry thoroughly on the foliage before a rain. Strong winds prevent good coverage of plants with spray materials, and cool temperatures reduce effectiveness of the insecticides. Below 40 degree Fahrenheit, they are nearly ineffective.

Insecticides recommended for control include alfaltox, guthion, methoxychlor, malathion, ethyl parathion and methyl parathion. Under certain conditions all of the materials will give effective control.

All operators are urged to observe precautionary measures recommended for the particular insecticides. Users of guthion and any form of parathion should wear respirator, and full protective attire.

The alfalfa weevil is already recognized as one of the greatest detriments to forage production experienced to date in Kentucky.

No other forage plant can compare with alfalfa in per acre production of livestock feed. Although

Mr. Small Garden Club Guest Speaker

William Small was guest speaker at the meeting of the Carlisle Garden Club Monday at the Nicholas County Library. He gave a very informative program illustrating several designs of flower arranging.

"Good mechanics are the life of an arrangement. You must have a good base such as oasis, properly placed and fastened with stickum to hold the flowers. Balance your arrangements by putting the weight in the center. Oasis is not good for arranging glads. The stems are so large it falls to pieces," he said. He cautioned us to not use too many flowers, that is, hide one flower with another. Some flowers have not their fragrance. Carnations are one that he mentioned. Snapdragons have a sweet aroma, and he said, "Honey made from their nectar should be a delicacy."

There were 18 present.

Mrs. Grimes Caywood was hostess for the meeting.

Buyer, Be Wise, BEWARE!
By Robert Matthews, Attorney General

Consumer Must Act As Well As Complain

When a "ten-pound" sack of potatoes weighs only nine pounds, the customer has a right to be indignant, but indignation alone will not correct the problem.

During question and answer periods following recent talks before consumer groups great interest has been shown in the mislabelling of groceries and produce. Several women said that when they asked a clerk to split a "ten-pound" bag of potatoes in half it was found the contents "were short as much as eight ounces to a pound."

What had they done about it? Made certain their "half" contained full measure.

This is not enough. The consumer has the moral responsibility to protect himself and the consuming public generally from sharp practice. Confront the manager with the evidence and report the facts to the appropriate authority, in this case the Division of Weights and Measures, Department of Agriculture, Frankfort, Kentucky. Do your bit.
