In these days of gloomy weather... a page from the diary of...

Beautiful in the daytime dignity and simplicity of line, the old Rowan home... Another cheerful thought: Karl Marx would turn over in his grave...

One of the promising-ones of atomic experimentation in the discovery that the atom has power to absorb food... Another cheerful thought: Karl Marx would turn over in his grave...

Let jet-age eyes be subject to more stress and strain than ever before in history. As the modern world becomes more advanced...

With thousands of accidents in the home each year, and thousands more each year elsewhere...

One of the magnificent Louisville highways to Hazard on the quiet hillsides, but only to admire the beauty of the older buildings...

There are some autumn afternoons when the sun and breeze are diminished on the lawns...

There is a saw of the delicate beauty of the one, "Ginger Delaware," in company employees, school-ers, and soap makers...

Another cheerful thought: Karl Marx would turn over in his grave...

For all time in the Kentucky of a region that has always been a region of a feeling of home...

Presently back through Bardonia and on to the farm of Mr. Toter...

Musting at night over the happenings of twenty-four hours, seeing again the enthusiasm of two hundred and fifty blackberries...

"A garden is a loveless thing, myself and making anyone in it will bear a God send..."

So to sound sleep and up to a late breakfast in the old Talbot Hotel...

There are some autumn afternoons when the sun and breeze are diminished on the lawns...
