Lithograph, "America The Beautiful" Sells 2.8 Million Copies In Two Years

A set of 10-cent lithographs of the American countryside has turned into the most popular photographic series ever produced by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

During the last two years, beauty-loving Americans have bought more than 2.8 million of the "America the Beautiful" prints, including more than 300,000 single prints and 47,000 full sets. It was announced this week by Homer A. Taff, State Conservationist, U. S. Soil Conservation Service, headquartered in Lexington. The series, in its second printing, was developed by the Soil Conservation Service.

Each picture in the series depicts a typical rural conservation scene, one for each state, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands bring the series total to 52 pictures.

The pictures include a Connecticut sanctuary for bird watching, curving strips of Maine farmland and cows grazing on a Vermont pasture. Kentucky's picture depicts the beauty of the famed Blue Grass horse farm country. The colorful series has been shown in meeting halls, banks, outdoor fairs, museums, post offices and airports, Taff said. Prints hang in homes, stores, schools, libraries and many offices, including those of Congressmen, he added.

"America the Beautiful" prints have been bought and framed for use as prizes and awards, cut up for scrapbooks and doll houses and used in television shows, Taff said.

Each print, in natural color, measures 15 by 20 inches on 20 by 25-inch paper. The pictures are suitable for framing.

The color prints may be obtained by writing the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. 20402 and sending a check or money order for ten cents for each picture or $5 for the set of 52 prints. These prints may be seen in office of the Soil Conservation Service, Post office, Carlisle.
