The eighth annual Central Kentucky Registered Bull Show will be held at the Bluegrass Stockyards in Lexington, Friday, Feb. 2, at 10:00 a.m. These bulls have been selected from Central Kentucky beef farms to improve the breeding program of our local farms. They have the necessary health papers and all bulls have been semen tested. This will be a good opportunity for Nicholas County beef producers to buy good bulls to improve their herds. Sale catalogs are available at the Extension Office.

Arrangements have been made to hold an alfalfa weevil control meeting at the Agricultural Experiment Station in Lexington, Feb. 6, at 10 o'clock. Both chemical control and timing methods will be discussed and demonstrated. Our local farmers are urged to attend, the materials, which supplied calcium, nitrogen, and phosphorus as well as other elements, is the lacking ingredient to efficient production.

The soil testing laboratories are now crowded in the latter part of the season. Farmers who have to wait two or three weeks for their results. The waiting period may increase as the planting season approaches. Laboratories become more crowded. Soil samples should be taken from the field or area to be treated. This is a fact which should be kept in mind. An efficient profit-maker while those who are certain losers.

Twenty & Fifty-One Years Ago

Thursday, February 5, 1948
The following were chosen by the junior and senior classes of Carlisle High School as the most outstanding students in the senior class: William Edward Spenser, Carolyn Stone, Betty Blish and Jean Humphrey.

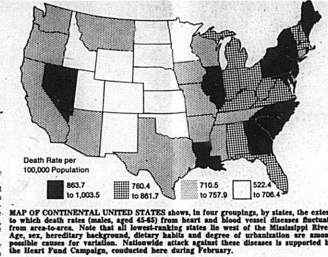

Collection in the current March of Dimes totalled $447, which still leaves Nicholas County $1,555 short of its quota.
Fire caused by removal of gasoline from a tractor caused $800 damage to the inventory of a garage operated by H.C. Galbraith.
Miss Mrs. W.J. Cannon, 70, at the home of her daughter in Williamson -- Mrs. J.E. Sapp, at the home of her daughter Mrs. John F. Sugg -- Mrs. William Colville, 79, at her home in Texas -- Joseph Henry Flora, 77, Paris -- James Alvin Mitchell, 82, at the home of his son, W.S. Mitchell -- Walter Randolph, 31, of the East Union Road.

MERCURY VAPOURS

Warren R. Fisher
Having been thrown a couple of months ago from two of my helpers when I had nearly finished writing with the writing in a public sale, I really don't know whether I should embark on this bit of "writing" or not.
We prefer to think we are not older than we are, but that our eyes serve us better in this instance.
I am now puzzling over the writing relating to a kerosene refrigerator. The man who sold it to me said that it was of better memory, but perhaps James Alvin Mitchell, 82, Nicholas County, is the man who sold it to me. It may be that it was sold to me by James Alvin Mitchell, 82, Nicholas County, is the man who sold it to me. It may be that it was sold to me by James Alvin Mitchell, 82, Nicholas County, is the man who sold it to me.

from our readers
Dear Sir:
You will find enclosed three dollars and fifty cents for another year's subscription. We look forward to reading our old hometown paper each week.
Yours truly,
James Smith

Cardiovascular Death Rate Varies Widely by States

MAP OF CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES shows, in four groups, by states, the extent to which death rates (male, aged 45-65) from heart and blood vessel diseases result from arteriosclerosis. Note that all surrounding states lie west of the Mississippi River. Age, sex, heredity, background, dietary habits and degree of urbanization are among possible causes for variations in rates. Statistical attack against these diseases is supported by the Heart Fund Campaign, conducted here during February.

Agree Or Not,

By S. C. Van Caren

I Say What I Think
Frankfort, Ky.--The controversial professional registration measure that would give local teacher associations the right to have a voice in formulation of school policy that affects the professional staff and the children they teach is expected to be introduced soon.

The bill is sponsored by the Kentucky Education Association and by most local school boards. It would give the Louisville, Paducah and some six or eight other cities some form of professional registration.
"To improve the quality of education within the state system through guaranteeing the right of professional registration to the public," is the purpose of the bill, according to the Kentucky School Boards of Education and the majority of the Kentucky Superintendents Association, and it is in strong opposition that has kindled flames of controversy.

Skilled Hands

Some 51,000 hands are now at work--learning new trades in Kentucky's 24 vocational-technical schools. They belong to the 20,500 high school age students who enrolled in the schools this year -- 1,600 more than last fall.
Another 60,000 youths are enrolled in other vocational educational courses, such as industrial education and vocational agriculture, in comprehensive high schools.

Most of the enrollment increase in the technical schools this year was made possible by the opening of 10 new extension centers across the state in September. Another 10 schools will open within the next two years.
Thirteen of Kentucky's vocational facilities are State-owned area schools. These operate the extensions. The 34 schools offer courses in 153 study areas--from woodworking to electronics--when the State Department of Education at Parisville. When Kentucky's present $23 million building program is completed--probably in 1969--there will be 374 different trade, professional and business courses offered, in classrooms within easy commuting distance of every Kentuckian.

In truth, the local school has little authority to do more than act on the advice that may be recommended by the school superintendent. They can approve his recommendations and still limit in certain matters, but they can initiate little action on their own without persuading him to be on their side. Recommendations of textbook committees have been "barn" that the books in class are not always carried out through the superintendent's office that has approved and ordered the books. The professional registration bill is going to be one that will be bitterly fought by both sides as it moves through the General Assembly.

Another school bill that has drawn opposition from the professional education is one introduced by Rep. Lee Lawson, R-Helen. It would repeal the three percent sales tax, from which local schools would choose one, that was passed in 1965.
About 20 school districts in the state have levied the 3 per cent tax on utility bills and about five of these levied revenue bonds although the tax has never had a test in the Court of Appeals. The State Department of Education will not approve a revenue bond based on this tax alone.
School legislation is going to compete with other legislation for the top spot this session.

Advertising's Growing Responsibility

It is a growing responsibility of advertising to help people with the changing problems of living. Americans who have struggled to attain comfortable wealth and leisure are finding that both may be meaningless. Many of us with extra time and money do not know what to do with either.
Anticipating a society which will have an increasing amount of wealth and leisure time, some sociologists believe that "leisure how to live" may become the most pressing problem of highly developed nations.
New personal services, new educational activities, new artistic endeavors, and new consumer products will be discovered and developed to serve the needs of a public which is just coming into existence.
It is a characteristic of the new public that does not fully understand new interest in music, art, literature, the crafts, participant sports, and hobbies.

"Free Film" offers have been offered by consumers to mean that the price charged by the advertiser is for producing and does not include any part of the cost of the film," according to the Federal Trade Commission, "and if any person of the responsible printed price charged for producing includes all or part of the cost of film, by sellers of film and film processing services has been proposed.
