Our Trip To Frankfort

BY VERONA EADS

On Wednesday, Feb. 14 three school buses, boarded by 121 students of the seventh grade, left for Frankfort.

The first place we went was the Old Capital, which was built in 1827-1829. It was designed by Gideon Shyrock.

Our guide said the keystone which held the building together, came from the Kentucky River. If it moved one-tenth of an inch the building would fall.

A marker on the sidewalk marked where William Gobel was shot when going up the sidewalk. The person who shot him was on the first floor next door, though they never found out his name.

Inside the Old Capital were many paintings. These include a collection of bird paintings done by John Audbon. There is a painting of George Washington valued at $100,000.

There were guns of all shapes and sizes from a little gun no bigger than a fist to cannons extremely long. Daniel Boone's gun Tik-a-Lik was there also. There were flags of all sorts, clothing, bullets and so many other things I could not begin to tell them all.

We left for the New Capital then and on our way went past Liberty Hall and the Governor's Manslon. We ate our lunch on the bus though everyone was so excited I don't think they ate much.

We went into the rotunda where our guide told us that the building was built 1905-09. It was 190 feet high and had 36 columns. The marble on the walls came from Georgia, the light marble on the floor came from Tennessee and the dark came from Italy. On each end of the New Capital was a picture of Daniel Boone.

There were many statues in the Capital. We went to the Legislature but just about half the people could get in so the other half went to the Senate. Mr. Wilson Palmer introduced the people in the Senate and Mr. Brooks Hinkle introduced the ones in the Legislature.

After that we went in the tunnel under the road. We started at the New Capital and came out at the State Building across the road.

I feel that I can truly say for all the students in the seventh grade that it was a day to remember.

Origin of Danville

Danville was formerly laid out in 1781 near the site of an early station of James Harrod's at Boiling Springs.
