

McCreary Natural Arch Finds Attract Tourists

Lexington, Ky.--The country of southeastern Kentucky's "McCreary county" is being formed in the state in 1941, says a "McCreary county" official. That's because the number of natural arches and other forces in this rugged and beautiful country constantly increase.

Not through natural building--that takes thousands of years--but through new "findings."

Area residents, extension services workers, U.S. Forest Service rangers report new arch "findings" these reports are made in the vicinity of natural arches--some of them magnificently hidden in deep forests or otherwise unmarked by other natural features. Unmarked by other natural features, they doubtless some local residents of them, but when such a resident takes knowledge of that arch may be temporarily passed away.

W. J. Biggs, area extension agent in McCreary, has found one or two. He has located others through the reports of residents who "tip down" to "tip down" to him were interested but there's an arch from my farm.

In fact, arch-finding has become a major project of local residents now Biggs says there are natural buried arches. He says they are, says the U.S. Forest Service, operating Dan Boone National Forest in the county. The service already has approached some of the arches. They have drawn good crowds over the years. The formations are generally high, tall, wide, round, and arch over a stream, water, or a road. Some are medium like the recently spotted arch of Koger arch, some are small like the Hollow Rock or Wagon arch.

Most are hard to get to now, except those to which trails have been built.

But all are beautiful. In some, small streams spill over the tops in waterfalls. In others, the arch tops are dry. One thing is for sure. Those not "traveled" are hard to get to, but again, that is part of the project--either get the forest service to build trails where feasible, or work it out through other avenues.

Those to which trails are now built include the Double Arch, Koger Arch, Split Top (it is beside a county road), the Double Arch, Koger Arch, Split Top (it is beside a county road) and Highway Knob arch.

There are others just as beautiful--

'From Seed To Sod And From Sod To Seed' Was Story Unfolded At W. J. Walden Farm

Frankfort--"From seed to sod and from sod to seed," was the story that unfolded at midway at the Bluegrass farm of W. J. Walden, who headed a tour of some 75 farmers, agronomists, county agents and state officials.

Sponsored by the Kentucky Seed Improvement Association, the Kentucky Department of Agriculture and the Co-operative Extension Service, the "Bluegrass tour" was designed to stimulate interest in Bluegrass seed and production.

The Bluegrass enthusiasts, seated on bales of hay in farm trucks, were toured through acres of lush bluegrass fields with a yield of 300 to 400 pounds of cleaned seed per acre.

Particular interest was shown in the display and demonstration of grassland farming equipment, with special emphasis on the newly developed stripper-leader, with the new machine, two men can do the work of 28 to 30. A reel pulled the grass into a comb-type blade which accepts of the seed heads. Augers pull the seed heads into a blower which funnels them back into a wagon, in one operation the seed is ready to be dried and cleaned.

Another stop on the tour demonstrated how seed production, with low expense and a minimum of labor, can earn $350 per acre and up. A one-man mow-and-cure, and cutter, the seed and general appearance of a power lawnmower, cut and as fast as the operator could walk.

The cutter's straight blade, held down by a corrugated roller, held 3/4 of an inch under the sod with a left-to-right chopping motion. All that was necessary to complete the job was to roll up the sod and load on a truck.

More Than 400 Name Varieties Of Cheese Add To Human's Diet

Everybody loves a cheeseburger, but suppose your restaurant manager asked you if you'd take one with Albert--or Zuma--or Breeze--or Casco--or Formaggio--or Pecorino--or Wild Geyser--or Tomahawk--or even WhiteRanger? Would you take it? Perhaps, but you'd still have a cheeseburger, basic or unusual perhaps--but still a cheeseburger.

Dr. T. P. Freeman, U.K. As an expert on cheese, Dr. Freeman, recently did some cheese research for Joy Dairy Month. He found more than 400 named varieties of cheese including those named above.

There are only 15 or 16 distinct types of cheese in the world, he points out. "These are Brie, Camembert, Cheddar, Cottage, Cream, Edam, Gouda, Hard, Limburger, Muenster, Parmesan, Provolone, Romano, Roquefort, Swiss, Trappist and the whey cheeses, Mozzarella and Ricotta."

Cheddar is the principal cheese produced in this country. By volume, it has the highest production of all other varieties' total production. In Kentucky, cheddar is not well represented type cheese made in commercial quantities. In the nation, about 15 percent of all milk production goes into cheese. Kentucky ranks fifth in U.S. cheddar production.

"Cheese-making consists of coagulating, curdling, mulling, stirring and heating the curd and whey mixture, draining the whey, and collecting and pressing the curd. For ripened types of cheese, the curd is aged for two to 18 months. Varieties are made by varying the manufacturing process, such as amount and kinds of bacteria.
