

Newspaper Fund Workshop Offers

High School Teachers Opportunity

The first opportunity for high school teachers to attend a Newspaper Fund Workshop in Kentucky will be provided June 17-20 at the University of Kentucky.

The Newspaper Fund is a foundation established by The Wall Street Journal to encourage careers in Journalism. The UK program, one of 12 summer programs sponsored by The Newspaper Fund this year, is for high school journalism teachers and publications advisers.

Lectures, discussion, demonstration and laboratory sessions will cover major responsibilities and problems of journalism teachers and publications advisers.

Intensive laboratory instruction will be given in writing, editing, photojournalism, advertising, layout and production. Workshop lectures and discussions will stress theory and principles of journalism education, the science of communication, responsibility of the press, and career in Journalism.

The workshop will be directed by J.A. McCassey, associate professor and associate chairman of the UK Department of Journalism and director of the small high school press clinic. He is a former high school teacher and has had 10 years of newspaper experience.

Mrs. Katherine S. Kivan, English and Journalism teacher and publications adviser at Waggoner High School, Louisville, will head the instructional staff. Mrs. Kivan was presented a $500 award from The Newspaper Fund in 1962 for her "Outstanding Journalism program at Waggoner."

Guest lecturers from newspapers and consultants from high schools with outstanding journalism programs will join Journalism and other UK faculty members to make up the workshop staff.

Workshop members will have full access to the Department of Journalism's laboratory facilities for classes in writing, editing, photography and advertising.

Seasons will be from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Participants will go to Louisville one day for luncheon with staff of The Courier-Journal and Times. They will be luncheon guests of the Lexington-Herald-Leader Co. at the final session of the workshop on June 26.

Enrollment is limited to 30. Full scholarships covering the costs of fees, rooms, and meals will be available for 10 workshop members, while 10 partial scholarships will be available for tuition fees only.

Tuition for Kentucky students will be $34, and out of state students, $70. Members must enroll in Journalism 513, for which they may obtain two hours of graduate or undergraduate credit. Applications for admission to summer school must be filed with the UK Office of Admissions and Registrar by May 16.

Correspondence for the workshop and scholarships should be addressed to J.A. McCassey, Journalism Building, UK, Lexington, 40506.

soda add qualities to burley crops badly needed for a useful cigarette leaf.

(2) Field should be high in fertility. Watch soil structure carefully. For instance, heavy light, "clayey" soils are not good tobacco-growing soils.

(3) Field should be disease-free, and grass-legume sods are best for this. Fields that have a black shank history, or black root-rot, will keep on giving crop trouble unless these are planned rotation that avoids these fields for four or five years.

FARM-NUMBERS IN KENTUCKY DECLINING, USDA REPORTS

number of farms to be in operation in 1968. In Kentucky it is estimated at about 136,000—a decline of some 2,000 from 1967.

That's the report of James Koepper, USDA-Kentucky Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, Louisville. His report was issued this week by the U.S. Cooperative Extension Service.

Average size of these 136,000 farms is expected to be about 125 acres, Koepper said, a gain of one acre per farm over last year. In Kentucky, there will be about 12,000,000 acres under cultivation in 1968, down about 100,000 acres from 1967.

In 1950, the report shows, there were 297,000 farms in the state, averaging 85.6 acres apiece, and 22,570,000 acres under cultivation. Neighboring or nearby states show similar decline in farm numbers. These include Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Tennessee and Missouri. Each show a gain in numbers of acres per farm, as does Kentucky, West Virginia up an estimated 7 acres over 1967.

Total acreage to farms in 1968, 100,000 also is declining but more slowly than total number of farms.

In the U.S. as a whole, farm-size has jumped from 218 acres average to an estimated 369 acres for 1968, the report says.

State Reception Center — First Step Back

Kentucky is one of 16 states that use a reception and diagnostic center as part of its program of rehabilitating juvenile delinquents. The State Child Welfare Department's Reception Center in Jefferson County is unique, however, in that it introduces delinquents to "life in the group," a step not begun in the other 15 states until after the diagnostic period.

The "group" is an entity of from 10 to 12 children similar in intelligence, age, physical maturity and degree of social problem. For a four-week period the delinquent will eat, sleep, work, play and discuss his problems within the confines of the group.

After the four-week introductory exposure to group therapy at the State Reception Center, during which time his social and emotional maladjustments are diagnosed by the staff, the delinquent is transferred to one of Kentucky's seven other treatment institutions, with the Reception Center staff determining which is most appropriate to meet his needs. There he begins life in a new group that will eventually lead to his return to society.

"A LOOSE GROUP" may have been a factor leading to confinement in a detention area for these three boys, State Reception Center Superintendent Glenn C. Bartow learns in discussing their problems with them.

LIKE A FAMILY MEETING the group meets daily for a therapy session under the guidance of the leader, here Bartow. Each member reveals what is disturbing him, what he dislikes about another member or what the group can do to become "tighter."
